LATER FROM CUBA.

ARRIVAL OF THE CAHAWBA.

Further Intelligence from Havana—The Threatened Outbreak—Slaves Landed—Political Affairs, &c.

The United States Mail steamship Cahawba, R. W. SHURTLEFF commander, from New-Orleans the 9th and Havana the 12th, arrived here on Saturday afternoon. After leaving Havana, she experienced very severe weather, and was compelled to put into Norfolk to replenish her coal, which detained her thirty-six hours.

Nothing further was known at Havana respecting the recent outbreak at Puerto Principe.

The Cahawba has a full freight of cotton and flour, and $27,000 in specie.

We are indebted to the purser of the Cahawba for furnishing us with the latest intelligence and still files of Havana papers.

The following letters from our correspondent give a summary of all the intelligence of any importance by this arrival:

HAVANA, Sunday, Nov. 12, 1854.

The six hundred bonâ fide negroes last reported by me as in the possession of the Government are not so, although the officers were so confident of seizure that the rumor obtained. Some ten or twelve, old and sick, had been thrown out at false points for deception and to cover the real theft. The cargo has been already disposed of under previous registration, as you were advised when the preparation was being made. Four hundred and forty were landed at Nuevas Grandes, on the east end of the Island, some two weeks since, and three late ones publicly sold in the city of Nuevitas immediately afterwards, and are dispersed in the country. The vessel which brought the cargo to the east got off the coast without discovery, and was was an American built vessel.

ANTONIO MONTERO still remains in prison for some time yet, as the Government seem to think that he was the veritable killer of CASTAÑEDA, of which, if guilty, he can never be convicted. I am informed by those who have known him from childhood, that it was an impossible thing for him to perform; besides, there are here the best to show proceedings indicate the party, who went home in a small vessel to Key West, within twenty-four hours after the perpetration of the crime.

General MANZANO has left to take charge of the Eastern Department, in anticipation of trouble in that quarter; a slight reinforcement is said also to be on the way. We have no intelligence thence, beyond what has already been communicated to you.

Colonel JOSE INZA has been nominated chief of our police, taking his post yesterday; and Col. THOMAS IRARRIZAGA, arrived by last steamer from Cadiz, takes his position to-day as President of the Board Public of Works, appointed thereto by the Supreme Government of the Queen at Madrid.

The murderer of the mate of the brig Mete, some months since, at Matanzas, will be sent to New-York by the steamer Cahawba for the care of the United States Marshal of your District. We have nothing new to advise; I hand you Commercial reports.

The health of Havana remains good.

HAVANA, Friday, Nov. 10, 1854.

Since my last, we have an order of the 7th inst., for the purpose of giving activity to the preparation for exhibition of the products and arts of Cuba at the Paris gathering and contributions of the world in May next. The committees called upon to attend to the classification of the goods, and our enterprising citizens, to present specimens of their fabrics and industry.

In our Journal issue of the 10th, will be found an able paper of the Captain General's, upon the subject of our municipal finances, and initiative instructions for the security of the indebtedness of that department to the Royal Treasury, associating eighteen of the citizens of the city for advice and counsel with the Board of Mayor and Aldermen, who are designated by name.

The Government has granted to the widow of CASTAÑEDA twenty negroes, of the class of Bozales—emancipated, after the fashion of PENUELA—to enable her to get a living without becoming a burden to the country or the State. She pays the monthly salary, in conformity with the royal edicts.

An attempt at suicide, under the arches of the Palace, a few evenings since, has caused some excitement, on account of the peculiar circumstances of the case. The person had empowered General GUESADA to settle his affairs, before attempting the deed, as "the only trustworthy person in Cuba, of his knowledge;" leaving at his disposition his effects—a box of gold dust and money—causing a man to be sent to his wife. The man is recovering in the hospital, the ball not having penetrated to the brain, but very seriously damaged his scalp and disfigured his face; and he will live to try it again, unless he should prove satisfied with his experience. The influence of General GUESADA over him may be the means of restoring him to usefulness, and saving the father to his family.

The Minister to Nicaragua, Mr. WHEELER, accompanied by the American Consul, Col. ROBERTSON, Captain EAGLE, Commander of the United States steam frigate Princeton, and J. W. PARKER, Esq., Consul of the United States at Greytown, dined with the Captain-General by especial invitation, on the 8th inst. The Dinner was, as such things always are, under the supervision, care, and hospitality of the elevated host and hostess, and the party on occasion gave evidence of the abundance of good things here, there and enjoyed. The Princeton went out of port last evening with passengers, Mr. WHEELER and family, and Mr. PARKER, for Panama, to meet the Columbia, &c.—all well on board.

A few troops have been sent East—General MANZANO gone there to superintend, in case the ripe sentiment should prove a prelude to an insurrection among the people, of which we have nothing reliable. The impression at the War Department is that another season for stars, crosses and ribbons is approaching.

We are remarkably quiet here—under our own vines and palms—and none can make us afraid. Health good, business dull, and nothing to advise of change in our markets for island products or foreign produce. Should anything occur of note before closing the slow mail for this steamer, I shall note it along.

Amusements.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—An extraordinary attraction is offered here to-night. The Pyne troupe, on their way from Philadelphia to Boston, give an operatic performance. The opera is "Maritana," and will be conducted by the composer in person, for whose benefit the evening's performance is set apart. There should be a large house, for by numbers only can we estimate the appreciation of our public for one of the best operas by one of the best composers of the day. Whilst the Pyne troupe were here, "Maritana" was played on eight consecutive nights—a musical fact not often recorded. Mr. WALLACK presided on all those occasions, without of course receiving any compensation for so doing. A complimentary benefit was the only way in which the management could express their obligation. To-night it comes off, and there will, we trust, be a proper response by our musical folk.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—To-night ROSSINI's "Barbiere di Seviglia" will be performed for the second time. Mad. GRISI and Signor MARIO, RADIALI, and SUSINI are in the cast.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—This establishment opens to-night with English Opera. The company consists of Middle. NAU, Miss BRIENTI, Mr. ST. ALBYN, Mr. ALLAN IRVING, Mr. HORNCASTLE and Mr. GEORGE HARRISON. In the chorus there are 16 male and 16 female voices. An orchestra of 30 performers has been selected under the auspices of Mr. THOMAS BAKER, late of JULLIEN's Band—who is the conductor.

The season is announced to last three months, and the repertoire contains the following operas, all of which will of course be rendered in English.

Lucy of Lammermoor; the Puritans; Don Pasquale; the Somnambulist; Fra Diavolo; the Crown Diamonds; the Bohemian Girl; Norma; Ernani; Lucrezia Borgia; Deaf Friesphuts, and perhaps one or two American operas.

AUBER's charming opera, "The Sylph," opens the campaign to-night.

EUREKA'S SOIRÉES.—Without the delicious Quatette Soirees of Mr. THEODORE EUREKA, our musical season would be sadly incomplete. It is with much satisfaction, therefore, that we observe an announcement that these rare entertainments will commence to-morrow evening at Dodworth's Saloon, Broadway. No sincere admirer of the divine art in its purest form should neglect the opportunity of subscribing to the series.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—An unusually strong bill to-night for Mr. WALLACK's benefit and last appearance. Three pieces will be performed—the "Honeymoon," (the Duke by Mr WALLACK, Juliana by Miss ROSA BENNETT,) the "Adopted Child," and the "Phenomenon in a Smock Frock."

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—Miss JULIA DEAN attracts good audiences here, and continues her engagement through the present week. To-night she appears in SHERIDAN KNOWLES' drama of the "Wrecker's Daughter." The performances will conclude with "Pizarro." Rolla by Mr. EDDY, Elvira by Mrs. JONES.

BURTON'S THEATRE.—The highly successful new drama "The Upper Ten and Lower Twenty," will be played every evening until further notice.

BARNUM'S MUSEUM.—A new domestic drama, called "Henriette the Forsaken," will be produced here this evening. A variety of farces, &c., in the afternoon.

NEW-YORK CITY.

New-York County Convention.

FIFTH DAY'S SESSION.

The New-York Board of County Convention assembled at noon on Saturday, at the Chamber of Aldermen, City Hall. At 10 minutes past 10 o'clock, the Board was organized, and on the calling of the roll, the following Supervisors answered to their names: Messrs. BROWN, BLUNT, BAIRD, HOFFMIRE, VOORHIS, WAKEMAN, COVERT, KELLY, ELY and DRAKE.

The President said: It will be remembered that the Supervisor of the Third Ward (BLUNT) was yesterday instructed to send back certain returns to the respective Boards of Inspectors in his Ward for correction. Is the Supervisor of the Third Ward ready to report thereon?

Supervisor BLUNT—I will state at this time that I have not been able to see the Chairmen of Boards of Inspectors of the Third Ward, except one, and I have made arrangements with him to call his associate Inspectors together at 10 o'clock on Monday morning. If the Board will give me till Monday, I will endeavor to see all the others, and to get them all to meet at the same hour, so as to be prepared, when this Board shall meet on Monday, to report the result.

The PRESIDENT—The Supervisor of the Third Ward reports that he has met with some success. He reports progress, and asks that the Committee be continued. If there is no objection, the report of the Supervisor of the Third Ward will be received, and the Committee continued accordingly. Is the Supervisor of the Fourth Ward ready with his returns?

Supervisor BAIRD then proceeded to read his returns from the Inspectors of the Fourth Ward, which were canvassed without interruption—there being no discrepancies discovered therein.

Supervisor HOFFMIRE then proceeded to read the returns from the Fifth Ward. There appeared one slight discrepancy in the return from the Fourth District, and he was instructed to submit it to the Inspectors of that District. The returns from all the other Districts in this Ward were all canvassed without interruption—there being no discrepancies apparent therein.

As soon as the Fifth Ward returns were got through with, and before any other motion could be made,

Supervisor HOWARD said—I propose to canvass the Sixth Ward returns now.

It being 2½ o'clock,

Supervisor VOORHIS said—I think it is so late in the day that we had better adjourn. We can canvass the Sixth Ward returns on Monday, the first thing.

Supervisor HOWARD—It won't take us so long in some of the other Ward returns have.

Supervisor VOORHIS—There are six Districts; they will keep us here until 5 o'clock.

Supervisor HOWARD—I am anxious to get through with my returns to-day, because I shall be obliged to leave the city on Monday.

The PRESIDENT—We could pass by the Sixth Ward, and take up the Seventh on Monday, without any detriment, if it does not suit the convenience of the Supervisor of the Sixth Ward to attend the Board at that time. There are gentlemen here who have other things to attend to now.

Supervisor HOWARD—I have something else to do all next week.

The PRESIDENT—There is no probability of getting through all the Wards next week. If the Supervisor of the Sixth Ward is not here the entire week, his returns can be canvassed the week after.

Supervisor HOWARD—I do not want to have the canvassing of my returns postponed.

Supervisor VOORHIS—I move we adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT—Those in favor of the motion that the Board do now adjourn say Aye.

Supervisor VOORHIS—Aye.

Supervisor HOWARD—That is only one, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT—All who are opposed to the motion say No.

Supervisor HOWARD and another Supervisor responded in the negative; so

The PRESIDENT declared the motion lost, saying subsequently that the Secretary was desirous that the Board should adjourn, and he had no doubt there would soon be a majority present in favor of adjournment.

Supervisor HOWARD then proceeded to read his returns, when

The Second District of the Sixth Ward had been canvassed without interruption, it being eight minutes to 3 o'clock.

Supervisor VOORHIS said—I move that we now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT—It is moved and seconded that this Board do now adjourn. Those in favor say Aye, and those opposed, No.

Supervisor VOORHIS and another Supervisor voted in the affirmative, and Supervisor HOWARD and another Supervisor appeared to vote in the negative.

The PRESIDENT—It seems to be carried.

Supervisor HOWARD—How is that, who is the third?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair votes Aye. This Board stands adjourned until Monday at 12 o'clock; so

At about three minutes to 3 o'clock the Board adjourned until to-day at noon.

The Wreck of the New Era.

We subjoin the following communication from our Special Correspondent, dated

EATONTOWN, N. J., Friday, Nov. 17—6 P. M.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I have again visited the wreck to-day. The sea is beating over her, and nothing can now be done towards removing the baggage of the passengers. I am informed by the Agent of the Commissioners of Emigration that he expects to find fifteen or twenty thousand dollars among the baggage, if he can get to it. Capt. HENRY started for New-York to-day. He has done all he could for the passengers, after being shamefully deserted by his crew. It is the opinion of the seafaring men here that the passengers could have all been saved, if the crew had consisted entirely of American seamen. E.

City Mortality.

A reference to the City Inspector's report of the interments during the past week, showing a total number of only 356. From cholera only three deaths are reported. The prevailing complaint in the City at the present time is an epidemic, chronic good health.

A Suspicious Pedestrian.

On Saturday morning, about 1 o'clock, Officer PARLIN, of the reserved corps, discovered a man going into the house No. 306 Fourth-avenue, with a large bundle of clothing in his possession, valued at $60. The policeman, thinking the man a suspicious character, endeavored to arrest him, but he slipped away from him, and ran off at a fast gait. The officer started in pursuit, and finally succeeded in making an arrest. On being taken to the Twenty-first Ward Station-house, he would not give his name, or render any account of himself, other than that he was an Englishman. On searching him, a letter, written in a delicate hand, and directed to JOHN M. STEWART, Union-square Post-Office, was found in his pocket. He was detained for examination by the Captain of the Twenty-first Ward Police, and was yesterday committed by Justice STUART to await further action.

LONG ISLAND.

The Irish Mission.

Rev. Dr. HEATHER, Secretary of the Irish Home Missionary Society, who has recently arrived in this City with a view of raising $30,000 to assist in the effort now being made to evangelize Ireland, delivered an eloquent and impressive discourse in the Sands-street (Brooklyn) Church, yesterday afternoon, to a very large audience. He gave some interesting statistics on the comparative state of the two Churches in Ireland, showing the steady increase of Protestantism, and gradual decrease of Catholicism. There were in that country, at the present time, over two millions of Protestants, (non-Catholics,) and less than four millions of Catholics. There was in Ireland a great field for Mission labor. The Society of which he, in this country, was the representative, was doing a great work. It had in its employ 101 Missionaries constantly engaged in diffusing the gospel. The expenses consequent on such exertions the Society is able to meet, but further effort is greatly needed, and daily becoming more so. Hence his present visit, that he might raise $30,000 with which to aid in advancing the good work. A collection for that purpose was taken up at the close of his remarks, and a very liberal sum was contributed.

Murderer of Harrison Arrested.

OLIVER LEE, the man charged by the Coroner's Jury with being the principal in the murder of WM. H. HARRISON, at the late election riot in Williamsburg, was arrested at an early hour on Saturday morning, at No. 300 Grand-street, New-York, by officers of the Thirteenth Ward. The officers received their first information that LEE was the person implicated by reading the verdict early this morning, and, knowing of his whereabouts, at once arrested LEE, whom they found secreted under the bed. LEE admits having struck HARRISON, but states that he was acting in self-defence. He was locked up at the Thirteenth Ward Station-house.

Lee, the Murderer.

On Saturday afternoon, OLIVER LEE, the man who was arrested that morning on a charge of causing the death of HARRISON, in the recent election riot, was committed to the jail of Kings County by Mayor WALL, to await trial. It is understood that he has given the names of several parties engaged in the riot not heretofore implicated. Warrants have been issued for their arrest.

WRECK OF THE PROPELLER BUCEPHALUS.

Ten Lives Lost—Further Particulars, and Interesting Statement of Capt. Alexander.

From the Buffalo Democracy, Nov. 18.

We give, yesterday morning, in our marine column, all the particulars of the loss of the propeller Bucephalus and a portion of her crew, and the rescue of the Captain, Mates, Engineers, and some of the deck hands, in the gale of Sunday last, on Lake Huron.

Captain ALEXANDER reached our city yesterday morning, and from him we obtain the following interesting statement of the loss of his vessel:

The propeller Bucephalus left Chicago, Saturday, Nov. 4, at 4 o'clock, P. M., with fourteen thousand and thirty-five bushels of corn, and a deck load of flour, seed, butter, ashes, &c., and proceeded to Milwaukee to complete her cargo. After making the usual stops at Waukegan, Kenosha, and Racine, the propeller arrived at Milwaukee about 5 o'clock, A. M. of the 5th, and at once began to take on the balance of her cargo. Having finished loading by 9 A. M. the same morning, and the wind and weather favorable, they left for Port Washington for wood.

Shortly after leaving, the wind increased in violence, blowing from the south, and by noon there was such a sea on that they could not lay at Port Washington pier; they backed off and came to an anchor, and lay till next day at 9 A. M., when the gale moderated, and they took on their wood and proceeded on their way, calling at Sheboygan. The wind at this time was westerly. At 6 o'clock was on the course for Beaver Island with a fresh breeze from northwest. At daylight on the 7th made the Manitous with a strong increasing breeze. Arrived at Beaver Island, remained until the 8th at noon for fuel, when they left for Presque Isle. Arrived there on the morning of the 9th, but had to lay until Sunday, the 12th, at 11 A. M., when they left for Buffalo.

Shortly after leaving the wind veered to the N. E. and it began to snow. At 3 P. M. the wind increased to a strong breeze, and at 5 it was blowing a gale. About this time the foremast gave way, and went over the side. At 6 o'clock the forward gangways were stove in by a heavy sea, and part of her deck load washed overboard.

Everything had been secured, in anticipation of a severe gale; but it increased at such a fearful rate, that it was almost impossible to keep the vessel on her course. The heavy rolling of the boat shifted the corn in her hold, and made her unmanageable. The other two gangways on the lee side were now stove in, and the captain had to keep her before the wind to get the after one secure, and throw over a portion of her freight which was on deck, to trim the boat. The officers were unable to secure the two forward gangways, and all the freight on the deck was washed overboard.

The wind continued to increase in violence, accompanied with snow and hail, and after an attempt to keep her on her course proved unavailing, as the boat would not stir, they kept her before the wind as their only safety. About midnight the rudder unshipped, when the boat broached too. All the gangways were stove in, the guards around the stern torn up, and the boat filling with water. Shortly afterwards the fires were extinguished, and the boat fast going to pieces.

Capt. ALEXANDER now finding that there was no hope of saving his vessel, ordered the three boats to be got ready for launching. The first boat was put in charge of PETER SNOWHAKER, formerly second officer of the Bucephalus, and in it DANIEL BROWN, Wheelsman; GEORGE RUTHERAUGH, HENRY WORRENER, GEORGE SMITH, MICHAEL STEIN, and JACOB MARKS, deck hands. This boat was swung out preparatory to being let down, when one of the men in it cut the rope holding up the stern and all were thrown out and drowned.

The second boat was placed in charge of R. STOGNARD, the first mate; and with him, A. H. BROWN, engineer; WM. FRYER, 2d engineer; SAML. CHAFFELL, wheelman; RICHARD SPARKS, steward; PETER KING, fireman; JACK ROLLINGER, do.; Mrs. MARTHA MINFORD and Miss EMILY MARBLE, passengers. This boat got clear of the wreck, and put off, heading against the wind. The night was so dark that it was impossible to tell where the nearest land lay. The crew, however, pulled safely some fifteen miles, and, through good fortune, made the land between two reefs, on either one of which, had they struck, all on board would undoubtedly have perished, as the breakers were running mountain high. The men here built a large fire on the beach, in hopes of attracting the attention of the third boat. They, however, were too far off to see the light.

The third boat—one of FRANCIS' metallic life-boats—was taken in charge by Captain ALEXANDER.

By the time this boat had been made ready, the propeller had sunk to her cabin deck, and the boat becoming entangled under the ledge of the upper cabin, it was drawn down several feet under water. Through the exertion of the second officer, the boat was pushed off clear from the propeller, and came up. All in the boat now got out and hung over the side, while the Captain, with a bucket, bailed the boat clear, and again all got in. They then pulled against the wind, and in three hours, or shortly before daybreak, approached the beach, and came in sight of the fire that had been kindled by the crew of the second boat. Captain ALEXANDER, knowing the coast to be very rocky, and the breakers running so high, suggested that they should keep out until daybreak, when they would be able to make the shore in safety, and stating that the chances were, should some attempt to land, that all would be lost. The men, however, were so benumbed with cold, that they insisted on pulling in, saying that they would rather endeavor to land, even if there should be the attempt, than stay out and perish before daylight came. The men were not aware that the captain had in consent. The first attempt failed, and all were thrown out. WHITE, however, succeeded in getting hold of the rudder chain, and clung to the boat. The captain was unable to get down to reach up to the side of the boat, and allowed himself to sink and reach bottom, where he opened up and caught hold hold of the rudder, and drew himself into the boat. WM. DAY also swam on to the boat and got in. EMMONS and GERRATY had held on to the seat of the boat when it capsized, and came up again in it. The other two Americans, BROWER and JOHN WEBBER, were drowned.

Those in the boat were left without oars for some time, but one happened to float by, and with it and the boat was got in shallow water. The captain and mate then got out and hauled the boat ashore. They landed near where the second boat had made the shore, which was found to be Black Creek, near Point Aux Barques.

The crew and the three passengers, fourteen in all, were treated with the most humane kindness by the people at Point Aux Barques, furnished with dry clothing, and everything was done for them which could be.

The Captain here chartered a fishing hut and with it brought all of those rescued to Port Huron, running the distance thirty miles in six hours, and from there came down to Detroit on the steamer Kate.

The crew speak in the highest terms of praise of the conduct of Captain ALEXANDER, on this trying occasion. The vessel sunk under the crew and the Captain was the last to leave her deck, which he did when the water had reached his waist, taking his chances for life in the smallest and poorest boat.

The propeller as we stated yesterday was owned by HOLT, PALMER & Co., of this city and Captain ALEXANDER, and was insured for $10,000. She was valued at $28,000.

The following is a list of those saved:

Capt. S. Alexander, of Buffalo.

LATER FROM TEXAS.

More Murders by the Indians—A Footman's Revenge.

Our latest dates are: San Antonio, 2d; Austin, 4th, and Galveston, 9th inst.

The San Antonio Ledger, of the 2d, has an account of another murder and outrage committed by Indians. The Ledger says:

On last Sunday evening, Mr. ST. WILLIAMS, living on the Medina, about fourteen miles from this city, was cruelly punished by a party of six Indians. It seems that he had gone from his house for water, and soon after his wife, hearing him shout for assistance, ran to the spot and found that the actual work had been done—her husband was killed. The Indians then came to the house, robbed it of its contents, and carried off their three children. They left the house a short distance and sat down to enjoy a feast served up with the most shocking cruelty. Mrs. WILLIAMS followed them, and by extreme exertion succeeded in getting from them her two youngest children. The other, a little girl, they would not give up, but carried off with them. She is still a captive among them. They also took off the horses of Mr. WILLIAMS. Mrs. WILLIAMS came on foot for a neighbor's house, almost frantic with grief, scarcely knowing where or for what she was going. After wandering about last night, and remaining for the whole of Sunday night, about daylight she came up to the house of Mr. CASTERLINE.

Several citizens of the neighborhood started off immediately in pursuit. We have not yet heard whether or not it is likely that the Indians would be overtaken, but would rather think that they will make their escape.

The news reached San Antonio on Monday the 30th, when a company of fifteen or twenty rangers, under the command of Capt. CARRWOOD, was sent in pursuit of the Indians. The party returned on the evening of the 1st inst. The Ledger says:

They followed them some sixty or seventy miles, when they concluded it was useless to go further, and gave up the pursuit. The Indians were Comanches, instead of Apaches, as first reported. In their flight they did not fail to act on their ruling propensity, that of stealing. They stole several horses from the settlement about Castle. Mr. MONTELL, a gentleman from the Rancheria, reports that a corresponding party of Comanches passed the Bandera Pass about ten days since. They were undoubtedly the party who committed the depredations, as they took the same trail back.

We learn from the Austin State Times that five companies of Rangers were mustered into the service of the State on the 3d inst. We learn from the State Gazette that the Rangers will be sent to Fort Mason Scott and Fort Worth, to await the orders of Gen. SMITH, and upon these will depend their future service or disbanding. The Gazette says the Rangers are fine men, from every part of the State, and well mounted and equipped.

The State Gazette tells the following tragic story:

A daughter of DANIEL MERRILL, of Liberty, had the misfortune to bestow her love upon a villain, who succeeded in marrying her. After a few years of infamous conduct, the wretch, whose name was MCCURDY, abandoned her, and not contented with leaving her to the cold mercies of the world, took with him their daughter, the only offspring of the ill-starred match. Mr. MERRILL pursued him, and, seeking to overhaul passengers, MCCURDY pushed on to the sea coast, still escaping with his child. At this time, as though Heaven had chosen an wreak vengeance upon him, the awful storm took place which swept away the town of Matagorda and everything in its path. It was during this terrible visitation that he found himself near the boy, and placing the child in a temporary place of safety, he undertook to board the merchant vessel in reaching the town. Night set in, and while Jackson enveloped the earth, either the sudden rise of the coast or the overwhelming waves of the wind became the avenging arm of his injured wife, and smote him to the deep. His body was afterwards recognized, heavily ironed, and the child was rescued alive, to gladden the heart of his mother.

The Galveston News has a long letter giving an account of the fight with the Indians, in which Lieut. CARR received a wound from an arrow in the abdomen. We are glad to learn that though the wound was at first considered mortal, Lieut. CARR has greatly recovered, and at the date of the issue, (Oct. 9,) was believed to be out of danger.

The Sandwich Islands.

The Boston Chronicle publishes the following intelligence from the Sandwich Islands as coming from a perfectly reliable source:

"By a recent private letter from Honolulu we learn that a message will leave this city very soon for Washington, with a Treaty of Annexation which has been drawn up in proper form, but not yet signed, as Judge LEE, who was directed by our Government to witness the signature of this instrument in question, has been obliged to absent himself from Honolulu on account of ill health, and consequently has not been able as yet to attend to the duty assigned to him.

"The treaty is to be signed by all the Chiefs, and they are each to receive a pension, with interest, with the funds of the territory, until the adoption of the pension to be paid to the Kingdom is to be transferred to ALEXANDER in case he shall survive his Majesty. It is understood that the whole amount to be paid is somewhere will be somewhere from three to four hundred thousand dollars per annum.

"The property belonging to the present Government of the Islands is to be purchased outright by our Government for a fixed sum.

"The above items of intelligence may be relied upon as correct, as they come from the highest authority."

FRANCE.

THE GOSSIP OF THE CAPITAL.

[Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.]

PARIS, Sunday, Oct. 15, 1854.

Mr. HOUSSAY, a member of the bar, is engaged upon a defense of M'lle CRUVELLI for her late escapade. It is to be published as a pamphlet, and is grounded upon the uncomfortable position she held at the Opera. It is a circumstance in her favor that she endeavored to obtain the cancelling of her engagement before resorting to violent means. There is doubt about the accomplishment of the prima donna's marriage in Germany, where it is said there were obstacles and objections urged by both lawyers and priests. However, the blacksmith, if appealed to, will doubtless set the matter straight.

RACHEL has appealed against the decision of the Civil Tribunal. The case now comes before the Imperial Court, and her cause will be pleaded by M. CASIMIRE, of the ex-Provisional Government, and a Jew like Crémieux. She has undoubtedly made up her mind to pay the damages rather than play the odious character, if the Imperial Court confirms the decision of the inferior tribunal, and if, in its turn, the Supreme Court awards indemnity to the author, M. LEGOUVÉ. The total expense of refusing the tragedy will be to her in that case not far from $10,000.

The best occupied man in France, ALEX. DUMAS, is at present engaged upon the following programme: He is superintending the rehearsals of his drama of "Conscience," at the Odeon; his "Duke of Savoy" appears from day to day in the Constitutionnel; his "Ingenue" in the Siècle, is temporarily suspended, owing to the discovery that the woman, a historical personage, to whom he gives the name of Ingenue, is still alive; his "Mousses" appear twice a week in the Mousquetaire; his "Mohicans de Paris," five times a week. He has promised a dramatic version of "El Salvador" to the Ambigu, for December, and a scenic adaptation of the "Mohicans" to the Porte St. Martin, for January. Besides this, he edits the Mousquetaire, and is furnishing a hotel in the Rue d'Amsterdam, where he is soon to give a grand literary housewarming.

M. FLEURIGNAN, from Washington, Patent Agent in Paris, is soon to issue the first number of a weekly paper, in English, intended to circulate principally among Americans. He makes no deposit of caution money with the Government, and therefore can make no allusion to politics. If the experiment succeed, it is not improbable that at no distant day, this weekly may be merged in a full grown daily, political, transatlantic and universal—such a paper as would withdraw all American patronage from Galignani. It would have been done before, but for two reasons: the capital was wanting, and it was not likely that the investment would pay any interest. Still, the enterprise is an engaging one for an amusing speculator. The first step is to get countenance of the Government, and then to place in its hands the sum of $12,000 as a guarantee for good behavior. All these difficulties, I repeat, may yet be overcome, and the Paris Daily American be furnished to subscribers at the rate of five dollars a quarter.

It was intended last week to make a strong effort to induce Mr. MASON to interpose in behalf of those American papers now charged at the Post-Office, of which the New-York TIMES and the Tribune are the first and foremost. But in view of the Soulé affair, and the evident hostility on the part of the French Government towards America which it argues, the effort is judged useless, and will not be made.

Mr. LOUIS HUARD, editor-in-chief of the Charivari, has become the manager of a small place of amusement called Les Folies Nouvelles. In view of this circumstance, the critics of position, who never noticed the place before, have added it to their list of establishments in vogue, and attend its first representations as if it were the Français or the Gymnase.

The season is so nearly at an end that I feel it my duty to record the present attitude of my green-house peasants, of whose progress I have from time to time informed you. The singular manner in which the fruit is produced is the delight of all the gardeners around. The nut was expected to fall upon the root of the plant, like a potato, and the amazement was, therefore, great, at seeing the flower detach itself from the stem, fall upon the ground, and plunge a long feeler into the earth. The plant was subsequently found to be produced upon this feeler or peduncle. This process, not remarkable to well read botanists, is a phenomenon in the eyes of such ornamental gardeners as came to see it. The pronunciation of the word is improving—pas-mêlé is its pendition, for the moment.

An exhibition of juggling feats in tents at fairs and fêtes, announced last week upon his show-bills that he would perform the same wonders as those executed by ROBERT HARDIN and HAMILTON. Mr. ROBERT HARDIN, having made a fortune at juggling, sold his name and his good-will to a pupil named HAMILTON, who has a nice little theatre of his own at Paris, was indignant, at seeing his name and that of his illustrious preceptor upon the door of a country meeting tent, and brought an action against the tinsmen. The latter defended himself, and protested against the insinuation that his bill meant in such a way as to mislead the public and to give the impression that the real HARDIN would exhibit sleight-of-hand. He went on to ask, "Who is this HARDIN?" A man whose real name is DUMONTANT, a man who has got no patent for Berkeley or 7 Bays for my clothes-line, who walks on ceilings head downwards!" The Court here interrupted him, dismissed the case and condemned HARDIN to the costs.

Therefore, tired of waiting for the fall of Sebastopol, which was to be a certain degree indispensable to the production of its spectacle of that name; has determined to bring it out before that consummation, and give the Composer a lesson of punctuality. The enchantment is certainly glittering, but what can be done? The mimo-drame has been ready three weeks, and the manager has come to think Lord RAGLAN a very tedious warrior indeed. In fact, M. BILLON is fairly out of patience at the slow way in which modern victories are achieved, and at the extremely unjust precedence given to fact over fiction.

ROSSI, the tenor, declines renewing his engagement with the Grand Opera, and leaves soon for Milan, there to perform the character of Jonas in the "Prophet," which it seems has never been produced in that city.

FERUCCI has made her first appearance at St. Petersburg, as La Fille du Regiment. A dangerous assumption of character, for the Czar might think so dashing a heroine could be usefully employed at Sebastopol. The attendance at the Opera in the Russian Capital is good, and the guests are gay enough, it appears, though the English papers will not fail to say that the notable families have been notified to subscribe and appear regularly in their boxes, under penalty of confiscation.

The Charivari has a picture of NICHOLAS, upon his knees in the act of knotting himself. Penetrated with remorse, and stung by conscience, he inflicts self-torture upon his person. The knout is an amazingly long one, winding three times round his body. The penitent accompanies his flagellation with the cry: "It's my fault, all my fault, MY VERY heinous fault!" Never was the mea culpa uttered with more unction, more conviction. Whether the real NICHOLAS has as yet regretted his conduct, it is impossible to say. The London Times continually has it that he passes sleepless nights, and tosses in his bed, that he has no appetite and is growing thin; but the London Times has a transparent motive for these comforting assurances. The Charivari makes the Czar a very corpulent man, and evidently derives its information upon the Imperial case from a correspondent whose sources of intelligence are less reliable than those open to the emissaries from Printing House-square.

Among the numerous beverages invented and manufactured this season, to take the place of wine, the least expensive is acorn water fermented. Households in the country make it by hogsheads at a time, for home consumption. It looks like beer, and by a stern effort of the imagination, might be drunk as such; but as the French dislike beer, it is made to resemble wine by an addition of beet juice. Such is the effect of an optical illusion.

An individual, of warlike tendencies,—so warlike indeed that it is a matter of wonder he did not embark for the Crimea,—has just come to his death, of a surfeit. He wagered that he would eat fifty Cossacks without drinking. A Cossack is a small cruel sort cake, and owes its name to the late inclination to manger du Cosaque. At the twenty-third, he had a fit, screamed for water, was taken to the hospital, and died of congestion of the brain.

To my enumeration of the occupations of families in France, I desire to add another. In a town of 10,000 inhabitants, I saw, one dreadful evening last week, a woman lighting the street lamps. Her petticoats were tucked up to her knees, exposing her limbs to the intrusive storm and to the indiscreet gaze. She was armed with a long red tipped with a point of fire. The glass forming the door of each lantern tilted on its hinges as the rod was inserted, and the mud was illumined for yards on every side. Then, if never before, was the scene brightened and the gloom cheered by the comforting presence of woman.

Such is the terror inspired by the Commissary of Police, whose special business it is to descend into gambling-hells, that people risk their lives to escape. Some nights ago, M. ROUMOUX, the terrible instrument of the law, broke into a richly-furnished attic, and summoned both the charge and the flats to make immediate surrender. In their agony to flee, some half a dozen issued from the window, and led the police a chase along the leads. They could naturally go no further than the corner house, and were caught on the eaves. One gentleman got into a barrel of water, but was detected by the swashing over of a wave, created by some motion of his body. The lady of the establishment hid in a tall entry clock, and would not have been discovered, had she not touched an unlucky spring, which set the alarm going, and led the Commissary to open the door to see what was the matter. The keepers of these private gaming-houses disguise their real objects by some ostensible and visible profession, calculated to allay suspicion and to account for such a constant run of gentlemen visitors. The table d'hote is the usual cover, and the guests are fed before they are plucked—fattened, as you might say, before they are taken to market. The proprietor of the house, and even the porter, are often ignorant of the capital sport that is had, sometimes for a consecutive twelvemonth, in the peak of the roof.

DICK TINTO.

P. S.—I have the highest authority for adding in a postscript that the Scum exclusion was intended as a lesson, if not an insult.

SANDERS' rascally letter to the French people is circulating here gingerly; it would be dangerous, however, to be known to possess it. SANDERS ought to be straight-jacketed at once.

His Majesty is highly enraged at the non-capture of Sebastopol; he wants more money, and is afraid to ask for a loan under the circumstances.

THE FIRST WHALEMAN.—The New-Bedford Mercury, in connection with the fact mentioned in the Journal a day or two since, that Capt. WILLIAM HAMILTON was the first New England whaleman, says that a chair bearing his name has been occupied in the whale fishery from that port during the last seventy years, and her fortunate owners have had no occasion to regard her as a misnomer.

ERIE CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Opening of the Ohio Central Railroad—General Description of the Road.

[Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.]

WHEELING, Va., Tuesday, Nov. 14, 1854.

Tomorrow is the day fixed upon for the formal celebration of the opening of the Ohio Central Railroad, which as you already know, gives us the long looked for railroad connection between the Cincinnati, and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroads, and thus opens still another avenue between the heart of the West and the Atlantic seaboard. Having been honored with an invitation to make one of a party of guests upon this jubilant occasion, I propose to give you some notice of the incidents of the trip.

The invitations issued by J. H. SULLIVAN, Esq., President of the Ohio Central, state that the several Railroad Companies between New-York and Wheeling, by way of Baltimore, and between Columbus and Cincinnati, and between Columbus and Indianapolis, have very unanimously proffered free tickets to the guests, taking them to Cincinnati or to Indianapolis and return. From this statement you may get an idea of the character of the arrangements made for the occasion. In response to these invitations, a company of about 150 gentlemen took a special train at 6½ o'clock this morning, at Baltimore, for this place. HENRY GARRETT, Esq., of Baltimore, of the house of GARRETT & SONS, (for a long time the financial agents of the opening road,) J. H. DOWS, Esq., and WM. PRESCOTT SMITH, Esq., Master and Assistant Master of Transportation on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, accompanied the party—Mr. DOWS having us all specially in charge, with Capt. RAWLINGS, one of the oldest and most successful conductors, in command of the train, while our engineer for the first hundred miles was Mr. THOMAS BROBST, who during fifteen years' running of locomotives has never run off the track, or met with any other the slightest accident. So you see we were well provided for in all respects, at the start. A special time-table was arranged for the occasion by Mr. DOWS, by which we were to arrive at Wheeling, 379 miles from Baltimore, at 12:30 o'clock to night; and notwithstanding the necessity of waiting and passing, at various points, some miles of freight and passenger trains, we were "on time" at every station, and reached this place at precisely the appointed minute. An instance of such precision is worth noting, and speaks well for the conduct of the road. Rich were creature comforts forgotten. At commodious houses, we were provided with a capital lunch at Martinsburg, dinner at Cumberland, and supper at Fairmount. So much for the programme of to-day and its fulfillment. All went merrily and happily, without the slightest drawback—weather, company, and all the circumstances of the day combining for the general enjoyment. Of all magnificent works of internal improvement which have demonstrated the genius and enterprise of our countrymen, there is none probably more worthy of notice than the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; and yet, although this Company was the first of its character chartered and organized in the United States (as long ago as 1827,) I do not remember having ever seen in a New-York journal even any moderately extended description of this great work, in which some twenty-seven millions of dollars have been invested. Were the hour not so very late, I should be glad to supply this deficiency;—as it is, I can only make a very brief reference to some of the most prominent points of interest.

The road, as I have already said, is 379 miles in length. Its course for the greater part of the distance lies through a succession of narrow valleys, winding around and among the rocky region of the Alleghanies and the successive ranges of hills by which they are approached; and affords the traveler so many points some glimpses of mountain scenery surpassed by nothing even in Switzerland, and seldom equalled elsewhere. Some idea of the natural obstacles overcome in the construction of the road, may be obtained from the statement that there are fourteen tunnels on its line, one of which is 4,100 feet, another 2,250 feet in length, while the aggregate tunnelling is 12,084 feet, or nearly two miles and a half. Of bridges there are one hundred and eighty-six, of the total length of 18,098 feet.

At the Relay House, eight miles from Baltimore, the road leaves the open country and enters the rocky gorge of the Patapsco River. And here the admirer of rugged scenery,—of alternating wooded hill-sides, steep mountains, quiet valleys, rocky crags, smooth gliding rivers, and tortuous, rapid, dashing streams, each continually replaced by the other as the glorious panorama of nature passes before him,—begins a feast which continues until the eyes become weary with the sight. The best friends of the road, in their efforts to picture the natural beauties of this route, have invested it with many a horror sufficient to frighten the timid traveler into searching for some way of avoiding the dreaded scenes. They tell us of horrible precipices, dismal chasms, frightful gorges, and indescribable dangers, from which you might suppose they had escaped only by a miraculous interposition of Divine Providence. All this is poetry of the "agonizing" school. I am bold to say that the most timid child, whose ears have not already been filled with these well meant bobgoblin stories, will pass over the road without a single tremor of fear to mar the pleasure afforded by the glorious ever-changing views. Steep mountains there are, and frightful chasms, and gloomy looking dells; but our track lies neither through nor over them,—and as the iron horse dashes triumphantly, exultingly along, one feels an instinctive sense of security, from the very passing vision of those distant terrors. But I wander,—as who would not wish to do, when in sight of so much wild unexplored grandeur.

Twenty-one miles from Baltimore we cross the Patapsco upon a viaduct of new construction,—a most beautiful and airy looking, yet substantial structure, a description of which I am sure will be read with interest, by engineers and architects at least. This viaduct is 310 feet in length, and constructed for double track, 25 feet in width from centre to centre of truss. The whole length is divided into three equal spans, 97 feet clear of masonry—resting on cast iron towers seated on masonry. Each span consists of two parallel trusses, 25 feet apart from centre to centre, and 17 feet high, and are composed entirely of wrought and cast iron, so arranged the former being in a state of tension and the latter in a state of compression, the proper condition of each. The top chord or stretcher is octagonal in form, with a circular core, and cast in lengths of 14 feet 10½ inches, which are connected at their ends by tenon and socket, similar to a water pipe, and are supported at each joint by light tabular cast iron posts. At the foot of each post the suspension rods meet and are connected therewith by a pin which passes through the eyes on their ends. These in another pin below this, and connected with it by means of links, to which the lower ends of the panel rods are attached in such a manner that the upper pin to which the main suspension rods are fastened, can be moved longitudinally by the expansion or contraction of those rods without distributing the vertical position of the posts, or placing an undue strain upon either of the panel or main rods. To this lower pin the suspender and bolts are connected, which pass down between the floor beams with a screw and nut on the end, by means of which the floor beams are pressed up hard against the bottom of the posts, and the whole bridge is adjusted.

The panel rods are made sufficiently strong, that in case of fracture in either of the main suspension rods, they would be able to transfer the weight, resting on those rods to the two adjoining panels, from which it would be carried back to the towers by the two sets of suspension rods that meet at the foot of the posts, thus making a complete failure of the bridge an impossibility. The top chords are connected by light cast iron horizontal braces, and diagonal rods near the bottom of the posts by iron beams and diagonal rods similar to those which together give the necessary lateral stiffness to the whole bridge. The iron work was done at Mount Clare, under the direction of Mr. JAMES CLARK; the bridge was raised by Mr. H. FRYE, machinist; and Mr. THOMAS A. HERSKUTT, carpenter, the masonry by Mr. S. D. MCMURTRY.

This bridge is the sole invention of WENDEL BOLLMAN, Esq., the "Master of Roads" on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; and, I understand, has been highly approved by all competent engineers and mechanics who have examined it, among whom is Mr. MCALPINE, of New York, who is said to give it his fullest sanction.

About 41 or 42 miles from Baltimore we reach Fair's ridge, which divides the waters of the Patapsco and of the Potomac, by a grade of 92 feet to the mile. From the summit, at Mount Airy station, we have a charming and expanded view westward across the Fredericktown Valley, and as far as the Catoctin Mountain, distant some fifteen miles. Dashing along down the valley of Bush Creek, and crossing the Monocacy River, we escape the rocks for awhile, and pass over the rolling region of rich limestone land lying between the Monocacy and the Catoctin Mountain. Approaching the "Point of Rocks," we pass a cut of some extent through the ridge of breccia marble, from which the beautifully variegated material of the columns in the Senate Chamber and Hall of Representatives of the Capitol at Washington was obtained, considerable quantities of which are seen lying on the side of the tracks, evidently designed for use in ballasting the road. From this point to Harper's Ferry—having crossed the Potomac, which is here about a quarter of a mile in width—the road lies along the foot of a precipice, a distance of three miles, the last of which is immediately under the lofty cliffs of Elk Mountain, forming the northern side of this noted pass. Just below Harper's Ferry, the Shenandoah River enters the Potomac, and their united waters is crossed by a fine bridge 1416 hundred feet in length, which, at its western end, divides into two, the left-hand branch connecting with the Winchester and Potomac Railroad, which passes directly up the Shenandoah, and the right hand carrying the main road up the Potomac. Of Harper's Ferry and its world-renowned scenery it would be quite unnecessary to say anything, even if I had room. I must on.

Passing by, without further notice, many a spot at which the traveler would fain linger awhile, we reach Cumberland, lying in a beautiful and imposing amphitheatre, formed by a number of lofty hills which surround it. West of Piedmont 200 miles from Baltimore, the road ascends seventeen miles by a grade, of which eleven miles is at the rate of 116 feet per mile. The road then winds for five miles up the Savage River, until it attains a height of two hundred feet above the water, from whence we look down through the top branches of the tallest trees on our right into the bosom of the valley. A little further on, we enter the Crab Tree Creek Valley, where, as in the Savage River Valley, the road hangs along the side of the mountain, up and down which it alternately winds along, giving us a splendid view of the valley, with its crystal stream far, far below, as well as of the forest-covered mountain which rises beyond, until its peaks seem to join the fleecy clouds. This point presents the finest natural beauties of any upon the route. I never saw its equal in mountain scenery; and a very intelligent gentleman at my side to-day, who has traveled until each district of Europe seems almost as familiar to him as the precincts of our Broadway, declares that not even the vale of Chamouni equals it. If some of our American landscape painters would but come up here and spend a brief season in sketching American scenery, I cannot doubt they would find subjects quite as worthy of their pencils as any the world affords.

But I must close this already lengthy letter, written by the dim light of a tallow candle, and with fingers aching cold, for the "rest" at our hotel is not provocative of comfort or good fare. To-morrow morning we start for Zanesville and Columbus, dining at the former and lodging at the latter. I shall endeavor to inform you to-morrow of the day's progress. If the Central Ohio Company can show us as well constructed and well managed a road as have the Baltimore and Ohio to-day, we shall begin to think that we have sinned egregiously in the past, in thinking railroad traveling inseparably associated with annoyance and discomfort. THE WINDHAM BANK ROBBERY.

$22,000 Stolen—Arrest of the Robbers and Recovery of the Money.

The Windham Bank of Windham, Connecticut, as our readers have been already informed by telegraph, was entered on the night of the 17th instant by false keys. The following particulars, in addition to those already published, have been furnished us. The watch-dog belonging to the Bank was killed, and the Clerk who slept in the building was blind-folded, gagged and bound. The burglars then broke open the vault and took $22,000 in gold and bills. After securing the young man firmly in bed, cautioning him against risking his life by attempting to make the least disturbance before Bank hours in the morning, when he could inform the Cashier, to whom they all wished to be remembered with affection, and bidding him good morning, started for Norwich by railroad, on a hand-car stolen for the occasion. In the meantime, the young man at the Bank broke his fastenings, called the Cashier, gave the alarm, and in a few minutes after the flight of the burglars, were in full pursuit.

The robbers getting to Norwich five minutes too late for the morning train to Boston, took to the woods, where they secreted themselves through the day. In the evening they took the Norwich steamer at Allyns' Point for New-York, but just as the boat cleared the wharf Sheriff BLISS and deputies took them into custody, and recovered a large proportion of the money.

The robbers, four in number, are now in prison at New-London. The leader of the gang gave his name as WHEELER. The names of the others our informant did not learn.

The following account of the robbery we extract from the Hartford Times of the 18th:

One of the most daring and successful robberies that has ever occurred in this country, took place at the Windham County Bank, in the town of Windham, last night, Nov. 17. The Bank employs a young man of about 16 years of age, with a large dog, to watch the Bank at night. The young man put the dog into the Bank at an early hour last night, and then he went away from about time. At about 9 o'clock in the evening he returned, and as he was entering the door—the night being very dark—four men, who were concealed near by, rushed upon him, put something over his mouth, and then effectually gagged him. The dog was managed by a plentiful supply of meat and chloroform, and was then killed.

The young man, gagged and secured, was locked into a room, and the robbers then went to work. They were busy for about five hours, and had all the tools necessary for their business.

They secured $12,000 in the vaults of the Bank; $2,000 in bills of other Banks; and $7,000 in specie—and with this rich booty they left the Bank at about 2 o'clock at night. The young man worked himself loose in about half an hour after they left, and gave the alarm. A hand car was missing at Willimantic, three miles from the scene of the robbery, and it is thought that the robbers, or a part of them, went away by this.

Four suspicious men have been lounging around Windham for several days. They are probably the robbers.

A YOUTHFUL TEA PARTY.—A nice little tea party met together in the town of Duxbury a few days since, comprising two brothers and four sisters, whose united ages were 470 years. The eldest brother was 86 years of age, the second 84, and the sisters respectively 82, 75, 72 and 70. In the ordinary ways of Providence, so large a family is seldom preserved to so great a age.—Journal.

ROMAN CATHOLIC EXCITEMENT.

Collision between a Bishop and Priest in Hartford.

[illegible]

Right Reverend JOHN BRADY, who has been about 18 years the respected pastor of the Roman Catholic Church of this city, died at his residence in Talcott-street, at about 8 o'clock last evening, (Nov. 16,) after an illness of 24 hours, from an attack of the cholera. The best medical aid was called to his assistance, but without avail. He was in the full possession of his mental faculties to the last moment of his life, and finally departed in a peaceful manner, having made his will and arranged his earthly affairs to his own mind, and with a full consciousness of having labored faithfully to promote the comfort of those who were under his pastoral charge.

Father BRADY spent the best part of his life in Hartford, and his labors here have been of a severe nature. When he came here some eighteen or twenty years ago, there were comparatively few Roman Catholics in this place. But the growth of the city, the building of railways and public works in this region, and the influx of foreigners, steadily brought additional numbers of Romanists to our city, until Father BRADY's church was overflowed. He attended alone, not only to the interests of the church, but to the welfare of his parishioners. He was constantly among the sick, always alleviating the pressing wants of the poor. He even kept several cows, so as to provide the needy with milk.

At the same time he set about building a new cathedral—purchased a desirable site, labored without tiring to gather in the money to pay for the new undertaking—appealed to some of our wealthy men who had confidence in him as a man, and from them procured assistance. His heart was finally made glad in beholding the result of his long and untiring efforts in one of the most beautiful and substantial stone cathedrals in New-England. Here was centered his highest hopes—here the result of excessive labor during the busiest portion of his life. His congregation was swelling to one of vast numbers, and the bright prospects of easier times and the consciousness of having accomplished the great work of his life, seemed to open a pleasant pathway for his declining years. He appeared quite contented and happy in his own modest home in Talcott-street, and there were few among us who wore a more cheerful countenance than Father BRADY.

A short time since, however, the "Bishop of Hartford" came among us. He took a residence in Church street, and desired Father BRADY to leave his own residence and take up one with him (the Bishop). This the old man refused to do, and he was right. Then there were questions about the property—the burying ground—the church—some land, and one or two dwellings. The Bishop evidently desired to control them, and to some extent, we believe, Father BRADY gave them up, but he refused to be cleaned out. Here were bones of contention.

Finally, as Father BRADY attempted to enter the church one night to procure some "holy water" for the consolation of a dying parishioner, he was opposed by the sexton of the church, who it seems acted under instructions from the Bishop, and Father BRADY found his ingress stopped at the threshold of his own cathedral—the child and pet of his life. He ordered the man away, but he would not go. He struck the sexton in the face, and the sexton returned the blow. The sexton appealed to the Bishop, and Father BRADY was suspended as pastor of the church. This seemed to cut him to the heart; but it was generally supposed that he would soon be reinstated. Such, however, was not the fact. On Sunday last it was announced in the church that the connection of Father BRADY with the flock that he had guarded so well as pastor was severed; and that Rt. Rev. Mr. HOUSSAY, of Providence, would take his place. This was the barbed arrow to the heart of the good old man.

His hopes—the labor of his life—his fondest anticipations, were dashed to the earth, and the blackness of night was only before him, as he was to plod along in old age to the grave, if one is disgraced as a pastor, still with a blow which his soul would not bear. He went up under it for three days, when that fanatical disease which ever revels with the least resistance in a system shattered and shattered by keen anguish of the soul, seized upon and made short work of him. He will rest in a peaceful grave, and his memory will long be cherished in this city for his constant assertions among his charge to make them comfortable, when in sickness and want—to instil into their minds wholesome lessons of temperance, of good morals, and to impress upon them the duties of law-abiding and honest citizens. That he has been dealt by as he should have been, we do not believe. But let the dead rest.

From the Hartford Times, Nov. 18.

This morning's sun rose upon an immensely excited population in Hartford. Their feelings had been wounded, and the bleeding wounds freshly probed, cross-cut and lacerated by the course which Bishop O'REILEY has pursued towards Father BRADY during the last days of his life, and the order which he, O'REILEY, dispatched from Providence, forbidding the use of the church at Mr. BRADY'S funeral, and directing that his body should not be placed in the spot prepared for its last resting place by Mr. BRADY himself.

The faithful pastor who had labored among his charge for eighteen long years—who had been with them in sickness and want—who had instructed them with the greatest care—to be temperate, kind, honest, and law abiding citizens—who had placed the church upon a prosperous footing—had erected a beautiful Cathedral, and still held a mortgage upon it of more than $20,000—this good pastor had departed to the world of spirits.

"What caused his death?" was a question on the lips of all. "It was a broken heart;" "it was poison;" "it was harsh treatment;" "it was not cholera," &c. Each man had his opinion, and all were free to express their sentiments.

On slight pretexts the Bishop had silenced Mr. BRADY as a pastor. Then came Sunday last, (the Bishop eccloing off to Providence,) the edict was made public that Father BRADY'S connection with the flock over which he had presided so long and so faithfully, was forever severed! In rugged health previously, this summary and arbitrary course towards him harrowed up his soul, and in three days' time he was among the dead! And these latter, less worthy, and less beloved, are to take advantage of the great success of his labors—at least one other. May he in consummate, if he can, have a good time.

On erecting the new Cathedral, the work of his own hands, Father BRADY placed a flagging stone in front of the Church, as the spot where his body should rest in death. In his dying hour, as a last request to those who respected and loved him, he repeated the desire of his heart, that his body should rest in that spot.

The earth was removed and the tomb prepared the day following his death. But last (Friday) evening a dispatch was received from the Bishop that the body of Mr. BRADY must not be placed there, and that the church must not be opened for his funeral services as had been arranged! The tomb was at once filled up. But the people—the masses of our Catholic population who are MEN and WOMEN—who have rights and the ability to maintain them, were aroused at this grossly insulting and unjust edict of the Bishop. Stalwart men were set to work, and the tomb was reopened. Masons were employed, and solid stone walls in cement were laid. The church was opened. The body was brought in amidst a crowded and sorrowful audience. But shame upon the man or men, or the rules which dictated it—the rites of the Church were forbidden, and the good pastor was to be buried like a dog, in disgrace, "without the benefit of clergy."

Rev. Mr. BRADY, of Middletown, a nephew of the deceased, rose with a heart full of sorrow, and announced that the altar was closed, and that the pastor was denied funeral ceremonies in the church that he had built! Here rose a wail and lamentation, loud and long, which would have sunk into any Bishop's heart that was not harder than granite.

It was soon announced, however, that sentence had been laid to the candles, the holy water, vestments, &c., and that High Mass would be said—and it was said there in that church, in defiance of the Bishop and his orders. It was a glorious triumph of the people and of right, over a tyranny as detestable as sin.

Bishop O'REILEY arrived here from Providence, in the noon train to-day.

We must let our Reporter tell of the proceedings.

[illegible] OBSEQUIES OF FATHER BRADY.—Yesterday (Friday) the residence of Rev. Mr. BRADY was crowded by the members of the congregation and by citizens of all denominations. The body lay in state, sealed in his embroidered robes. Many were deeply affected at this their last look at their beloved pastor on earth.

This (Saturday) morning, [illegible] were seated in the Bishop's orders, the Church was draped in black, as were the ornaments on the altar. The officiating priests also wore garments of sombre hue [illegible]

A SOLEMN SCENE.—[illegible] Church, on the 20th October. Her captain and crew saved themselves in their boats.

We have papers from the city of Mexico to the 4th inst., and from Vera Cruz to the 6th inst., brought by the Orizaba.

The Siglo XIX, of the 2d inst., quotes a statement made by the Diario Oficial, on the authority of private letters, dated at Tetepango, Oct. 29, that the Government troops had gained considerable advantage over a body of revolutionists, at a place called Puerto de Cayuca, or Campo de Guerrero. The latter were led by ANACLETO PAVARIN, and the Government troops commanded by Col. FRANCISCO ESPINOSA MORENO. The revolutionists were completely routed, two hundred were slain on the field, two pieces of artillery and other arms were captured, and the positions taken. The Government troops then marched towards the town of Cayuca.

The English and French inhabitants of the city of Mexico had a grand illumination on the night of the 1st inst., in honor of the [false report of the] taking of Sebastopol.

The Mexican blockading squadron at Acapulco has met with a sad disaster. On the 19th of August a furious storm prevailed in the vicinity, and damaged the three unfortunate vessels so much that one of them, the schooner Santa Anna, foundered with all hands, soldiers and crew, amounting to about seventy, on board. The only person who escaped was the cook. The occurrence took place off Lorato. The fate of one of the other two, the schooner Guerrero, is not known. The third, the schooner Santa Anna, sustained extensive injury.

The Siglo XIX announces that in the whole department of Nuevo Leon fevers and measles were epidemic.

SANTA ANNA had recovered his health, and returned to the city from Tacubaya on the 26th ult.

The Mexican Revenue appointment that Gen. ALMONTE, now Minister Plenipotentiary for Mexico, at Washington, will go to Vienna in the same capacity, and has been replaced by Mr. FRANCISCO ARRANGOITIA, Mexican Consul in New-York, and lately at this place.

The Italian Opera Company had left the city of Mexico, and were performing at the latest dates in Vera Cruz. FIORENTINI, STEFFANONE, MARINI, BENVENTANO, BOTTESINI and Signorina BARBINI, a performer on the violin, continued its chief members. They were about to proceed to Havana.

The Santa Anna, the loss of which is noted above, left this port, it appears, on the 6th ultimo, under the command of Captain JAMES GUNWARDY, with a cargo of 670 tons of coal, and 600 bales of cotton. Two days after getting out to sea, she commenced to make water. On the sixth day she managed to get in sight of Vera Cruz, but she could not enter, in consequence of a heavy Norther which was blowing at the time. She therefore had put out again, and the pumps not being able to arrest the water from gaining on her, she finally went down.

Senor Don MANUEL MARIA TRULLET, one of the most constant of SANTA ANNA'S friends, and some relation or connection, if we mistake not, died at Medellin on the 31st. He was interred with great ceremony at Vera Cruz.

The Vera Cruz Eco del Comercio of the 2d announces that the Mexican Government had provided that the Pacific steamers running between San Francisco and Panama may in future touch at Manzillo, instead of Acapulco, under blockade.

The flag of the new Mexican war steamer Santa Anna was blessed, with great ceremony, at Vera Cruz, on the 23 inst. The Government has ordered two more steamers to be built, it is understood.

Our private correspondence announces that Mr. DOYLE, the British Minister at the city of Mexico, has been much disgusted at certain late proceedings of the Government, at the tyrannical paltriness of excluding papers from the country, if they speak unfavorably of SANTA ANNA or his Government. Mr. DOYLE has thought it necessary to send a special envoy to England, with dispatches on the subject of the differences which consequently exist between him and the Government.

Reported Victory of Alvarez over the Government Forces.

[From the New-Orleans Delta, Nov. 12.]

ACAPULCO, Monday, Oct. 23, 1854.

A courier this moment has arrived, bringing news of an engagement at a place called Clavijaca, between the limits of the States of Guerrero and Michoacan. The ALVAREZ force was under the command of Gen. JALYIRO, who got to fight the SANTA ANNA force under command of Gen. ARRIAGA, killing 300, among whom was Gen. QUINTANAR and his aid. Many were wounded, and a number taken prisoners. The ALVAREZ loss was trifling. When the Government troops were retreating, they charged "Viva el Santa y Alvarez!"

STARTLING DEVELOPMENTS.—The attempted robbery of the County Treasurer's office on last Thursday night, seems to have been but one of a series of robberies which were to have been perpetrated during the Fall and Winter. The arrest of JAMES W. FITZGERALD, (who is lying in jail under $2,000 bonds,) and the confession of SAMUEL BAILEY, (who turned State's evidence,) have probably broken up the gang and prevented the crimes that would otherwise have been committed. The statements of BAILEY show a plan of operations of the most startling character. A number of buildings in the town and country were to have been burned, and the owners robbed during the excitement and alarm of the fire. The appearance of one of the conventions, and the consequent breaking up of all their plans, has alone preserved many of our citizens from being robbed, and their property destroyed by fire.

Among the number marked for robbery were R. R. STRONG, (County Treasurer,) HENRY WELLICE, Col. DUFFY, JOHN M. EWING, THOMAS J. CUMMINGS, M. H. GRIDLEY, RICHARD RICHARDSON, R. MERCER BROWN, De HARP BROWN, and others. In several instances, the night for the robbery had been determined upon. The character of the conspiracy, (in which eight persons are said to have been engaged,) may be gathered from the execution of numerous false keys, and our citizens may be thankful that the schemes were discovered by such a providential occurrence.—Engineer.

Billiards were invented by HENRIETTE DUCHESS, a French artist, in the reign of CHARLES IX., about the year 1571, and at once came to be a most fashionable and engrossing game.

KANSAS.

Special Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

KANSAS CITY, WYANDOTTE, Nov. 1, 1854.

Without giving you the details of my excursions through Kansas for the last three weeks, for which I have not now the necessary time, I will briefly sketch brief synopsis as can be condensed into the limits of a reasonable letter.

Kansas is nearly rectangular, much the longest east and west. The eastern part comprises all that is best adapted to culture, and with that only has emigration to do, at present. The Kansas River flows through it in an easterly course, about one-third of the distance from the northern line; and the Arkansas, flowing southeasterly, crosses the southern line about one hundred miles west of the Missouri boundary. The interval between these rivers, called the divide, is high, rolling prairie, watered by the tributaries of both, which rise in far eastward; and over this ridge, running in nearly the same course as the Kansas, and distant fifteen to thirty miles from it, passes the famed Santa Fé road, from the Missouri border to New-Mexico. About forty miles from the mouth of the Kansas that river receives the waters of its most important southern tributary, the Waka-ru-sa, which flows for some distance intermediate between the river and the road—distant, say eight to fifteen miles from each till near its mouth.

The eastern part of that portion of the Territory north of the Kansas is not yet open for settlement, it containing the reservations of the Delawares and some smaller tribes, and such of the lands as they relinquish, on condition of their being sold to the highest bidder, and the profits being paid the tribes. This, as you see, cuts off the right of emigrants to pre-emption, and hazards all claims made on said lands. In fact, the accessibility, fertility and beauty of this region, lying on the Missouri River, and watered by the Grasshopper and other of the most lovely tributaries of the Kansas, have induced many to locate there; and such have been notified by the Government that they are trespassers, and must leave; though it is doubtful whether they will be removed by force. The new town of Leavenworth, near the fort, is on this land; and the titles to the lots sold are good only so far as the speculating company selling them are responsible. Part of the Pottawattamies' reservation is also north of the Kansas; thus, altogether, shutting emigrants out from the eastern frontier, and reserving the best lands in the whole Territory. Beyond these reservations, on this side the Kansas, the country is hilly and rocky, and excepting on the river bottoms it is sterile, though abounding, as I am credibly informed, in valuable minerals. I have seen very fine specimens of lead and copper found in this region—the latter most excellent.

On the south, south of the Kansas, the Shawnees have reserved a strip of thirty miles in width on the Missouri border, thus shutting out the emigrant from the frontier in that section, also; and this reservation, also, embraces some of the finest land in Kansas. The Osages, Ottawas, and others, have also reservations in the southeastern part, embracing the fine bottom and timber lands on the Neosho, (a tributary of the Arkansas,) and the Osage. The Sacs have also a tract of twenty-five miles square, lying a little south of the Santa Fé road, some eighty miles from the Missouri line, (by the road,) and taking in the best timber on the tributaries of the Neosho. The Kansas Indians, too, have a reservation on the head waters of the Neosho, about a hundred and twenty miles from the frontier, on which is Council Grove, a trading point on the Santa Fé route.

Having become satisfied from these facts that this divide contains the best points for settlement, all things considered, I started from Westport, on the Missouri frontier, in company with six others, on the 10th October, to explore it. Feeling no desire to wander far from the public roads, we engaged a man with team and wagon, by the day, for the trip, and put ourselves in motion for Council Grove and the Santa Fé trail.

My synopsis of this trip will be of the briefest character, and consequently dry. I may enlarge hereafter. Within a mile from Westport, we crossed the boundary line and entered Kansas. In three miles further, we turned a little to the left of the road, to call at the Mission of the Methodist Church South. Its ample buildings, well-fenced fields and capacious stacks of grain abundantly sustain the popular character for thrift given to its manager, Rev. Mr. JOHNSON, a prominent candidate for delegate to Congress. He is also said to be a shrewd speculator in slaves, and keeps several at the Mission.

Near by are the Missions of the Baptist and Quaker Churches, both of which refuse to own slaves.

The regular stations for camping on this route, and their distances, are as follows: Indian Creek, 22 miles; Cedar Creek, 9; Bull Creek, 7; Black Jack, 6; Willow Spring, 12; One Hundred and Ten, 25; Switzer's Creek, 8; Dragoon Creek, 4; Belcher's Creek, 10; One Hundred and Forty-two, 16; Rock Spring, 10; Council Grove, 8—in all, 128 miles.

Starting about 2 o'clock P. M., the first night brought us to Indian Creek. The country we had seen was fine prairie, dry and rolling, and with thin belts of timber, bordering occasional streams, or their beds rather, for they were now mostly dry. The second day presented a similar landscape, though with still less timber, and we made our camp at Bull Creek, where we did not find good water. Ten miles the next morning brought us to the Western line of the Shawnee lands. The prairie had grown increasingly lovely, but with less timber; and as we now entered upon lands open for settlement, and with scarcely a grove in sight, we felt sensations of admiration and despair. That the land was rich and beautiful beyond description, all agreed; but that it could be rapidly settled without the facilities of timber and wood, none seemed to believe. Thus we continued to Willow Spring, which, to our dismay, was found to be dry. There was a cabin on the spot, (the third we had seen since leaving the Reservation,) in which was a store of goods commenced in demand. A well was being dug; twelve feet had reached the white limestone rock, which was being thrown out by blasting. It was the whitest I ever saw, and contained fossils in large proportion. Here the people brought their water half a mile, and it was stagnant at that; so that we were not surprised to find a woman suffering from the "shakes." But as water began to appear in the well, we hoped the last for them, and went on.

The great prairie between Willow Spring and One Hundred and Ten, was the most discouraging we had seen. In the whole distance, no trees are seen but those far away to the north, in the valley of the Wakarusa. But the land is finely rolling and very rich; and in common with most we have passed, gives abundant indications of good building stone not far from the surface. Over plain stretching beyond plain, and gentle hill rising into view with every eminence we attain, winds the great trail, destitute of houses or other memorials, save the whitening bones of horses and cattle which are strewed along its sides, and occasionally a solitary grave, whose silent headstone admonishes us of the sudden death, far from home and friends, of some unfortunate seeker after the golden treasures of California hills.

Between these points we found no water, save a little, very poor, for the horses. Yet over this, the driest prairie I have seen, I have met the pilgrims in the belief that water can be found by digging down to twenty-five feet. We camped about ten miles from Willow Spring, on the bank resembling [illegible] night; but we were early astir in the morning, and reached One Hundred and Ten about 10 o'clock. Here our sight was relieved by timber of good size, and comparatively pleasy; some decent cabins—well-fenced fields, and a thirty-pole, from whose top proudly floated the American flag.

[illegible]

All these lands quite belonged to the Shawnees; and a Frenchman, marrying a woman of the tribe, had made these improvements. They have been purchased by two brothers McGee, living near Westport—one of whom resides here. He has a store, from which he retails to traders, emigrants, and Indians, abundant supplies of whisky and tobacco, besides such less staple goods as flour, corn, &c. He is a rich specimen of pro-slavery buggydocic, whose inspiration is whisky, whose sentiments are oaths and threats. He has in his family a strapping black female slave, with her little daughter, who is half white. He and his friends and relatives have seized all the valuable timber in the vicinity for their own use, and he has brought a portable saw-mill to work it up as soon a possible.

But Mrs. McGee is a capital housewife, and gave us a fine dinner, at the very moderate charge of twenty-five cents apiece. It is astonishing how such ministrations affect the spirits and temper of hungry men; and after ours, we felt little disposition to see anything in any but pleasing colors.

The creek called A Hundred and Ten is a tributary of the Osage, and is very well timbered with oak and black walnut, of good size. These are the staple trees of this region, and are produced in low creek bottoms, of good size and character, but in small quantities.

We traveled on in good spirits till we came to a fine, high prairie-point, overlooking Switzer's creek, when all broke out in exclamations of spontaneous enthusiasm. On every side stretched the most magnificent succession of gentle slopes and valleys we had ever seen, and in nearly every direction were visible borders of woodland, that fairly captivated our dusty senses. It seemed, in that bright, pure atmosphere, as though our scope of vision extended for fifty miles.

After we had wearied ourselves, expressing our admiration, we proceeded to Dragoon Creek, and camped. We found water in plenty; and were early astir in the morning, determined to reach Council Grove that day. From this point, a gradual deterioration is evident in the character of the upland prairies. The soil becomes thin, and mixed with fine, flinty stone, till, before we reach Council Grove, it acquires a character of real sterility.

Council Grove is a trading station on the lands of the Kansas Indians, or, as they are here called, the Kaws. It is situated on the Neosho near its source, and possesses considerable fine timber (for Kansas,) and some good bottom lands. But the surrounding country is too poor to admit of its ever becoming anything more than a mere trading point. A branch of Mr. JOHNSON'S Mission is established here, and is doing well: i. e. making money for the Rev. proprietor. It seems a general opinion in the Territory, that the great object of a mission is novice dissimilar from that of a bank, or other financial enterprise. And it is here, as at the the Shawnee Mission, observable, that Rev. Mr. JOHNSON is careful that the spread of the gospel and the "peculiar institution," shall go on in the same ratio.

I must abridge even my heaviest, and omit all account of our return trip via Ft. Riley and the Kansas River; for I wish to come at another point before I close, which is to advise all eastern emigrants to postpone their journey till February or later, despite the promises and representations of the Emigrant Aid Co., or any one else. Such is the scarcity of timber, and the absence of saw-mills, that most of the emigrants on the ground will see great hardships before Spring, and wish themselves, perhaps, again in the snug homes they have left. The Winters are short, to be sure, but often severe; and should the next be such as one as was experienced not long since, it will be impossible for the unprotected settlers to escape the most severe suffering, and in many cases death itself.

But coming in February, March or April, the emigrant will find, if he seek the right section, abundant prairie, rich as the plain of Sodom, where he can pitch his tent, dig his well, and commence to plow and plant. During the Summer he can procure lumber, build his house, cut his hay, and be prepared for the worst. His first crop will end his real hardships, and he can thenceforward march steadily on to wealth. And by going on this Fall, he will gain nothing; for the accessible timber claims are already seized and held under regulations which render them safe till Spring, when it is only reasonable to suppose that many of them, from one cause and another, will be abandoned. While, if he goes on now, he will find himself entirely unable to support a horse, ox or cow, during the Winter, except by feeding exclusively on Indian Corn, at a cost of from one to three dollars a bushel; for such is the range of price in different parts of the Territory.

Nor need he, I think, apprehend much danger to the cause of freedom by the delay; for, aside from the fact that most real emigrants from the Slave States will vote against the institution, we shall probably get no election this Fall except for Delegate to Congress.

And finally, I would say to all who have energy and industry, come to Kansas, at the earliest practicable moment. At first, you will be startled at the lack of timber and streams; but as you discover the abundant beds of stone-coal, the fine limestone, and the pure springs not far hidden below the surface of the ground, you will take courage. And then, when you reflect that to get a first crop of fifteen hundred bushels of corn, worth at least fifty cents a bushel next Fall, you need only plow and plant twenty to thirty acres of prairie, without any expense of hoeing, &c., you will begin to see that in no other country equal to it in climate and location, has Providence so carefully secured the interests of the emigrant farmer, as in Kansas.

Indians of Kansas Territory and their Treaty Rights.

From the Kansas Pioneer, Oct. 18.

Comparatively but little is known by the people of the States concerning the Indians of this Territory, and much less in regard to their treaty rights. A month's residence here cannot be supposed to have given us very extensive information in regard to the character, intelligence and pursuits of the Indians; but we have taken some pains to obtain from well informed persons correct information in regard to the possessions of such Indians as have treaty rights with the United States.

Immediately at the mouth of this river are the lands of the Wyandott Indians—a small tract. We are not certain of the extent, but it is perhaps equal to from six to eight miles square, although not in square form. It was purchased by the Wyandotts of the Delawares, about twelve years ago, and is the maps is generally included in the Delaware's lands. It is a well timbered and well watered section of the country—a number of small streams of clear, pure water running through it. We paid a visit to WM. WALKER, of this nation, who resides about two miles north of the Kansas River, to whom we are indebted for a correct map of Kansas and Nebraska, and for much information in regard to the general character of the country. The Wyandotts have well cultivated farms and comfortable houses, and, indeed, present good evidences of a thrifty and intelligent people. We saw quite a number of good orchards. Wyandott City, at the junction of the Missouri and Kansas Rivers, is a pretty location, presenting a handsome view from the Missouri, several miles below. Here are quite a number of comfortable frame and log houses, including a council-house and jail. We are not certain of their relations to the Government, but their land is not subject to sale or settlement.

The Delaware Nation own a very large territory, bounded on the east by the lands of the Wyandotts and the Missouri river, and on the south by the Kansas, being about thirty miles wide by fifty-five miles long, with what is known as "The Outlet"—having a continuation of half westward one hundred and fifty miles by ten miles wide, which was ceded to this nation as a kind of right of way to the buffalo hunting grounds. By the recent treaty, ten miles wide on the Kansas river is reserved to the Indians, which they hold in common; and all north of this reserve is to be sold to the highest bidder, for their benefit, except "The Outlet," which alone is subject to pre-emption. Squatters, however, are occupying the lands which are to be sold, and have agreed to protect each other against speculators, and thereby permit the occupants to purchase at Government price. That portion reserved to the Delawares is well timbered, and the remainder has considerable timber on the Missouri river, and on Big and Little Blue rivers, Vermillion, Stranger, and some small streams. These Indians have some good farms, and we found amongst them several educated, intelligent men.

The city of Leavenworth is located on the lands of the Delawares, adjoining lands of Fort Leavenworth. A sawmill has been erected, and quite a number of buildings are in progress. Osawkee is a town just laid out on the Grasshopper.

The Kickapoos, Sacs, Iowas tribes own small tracts north of the Delawares; and bounded on the east by the Missouri river, the Kickapoos immediately north of the Delawares, the Sacs north of the Kickapoos, and Iowas north of Sacs and adjoining the north line of Nebraska. We are not well posted in relation to these tribes. The Kickapoo lands, or a portion of them, we are informed, are subject to settlement. Of those of the Sacs we are not informed. The Iowa lands are to be sold to the highest bidder, for the benefit of the Indians.

The Shawanoes are distinguished as the Shawnee Reserve and Purchase. The Reserve is bounded on the east by the line of the State of Missouri, and on the north by the Kansas River—it is thirty miles east and west by about twenty-five miles north and south. It is not now subject to settlement, but by the terms of the treaty, is to be surveyed by the United States, after which the Indians are entitled to select 200 acres to each person—the selection to be made within ninety days. After the Indian selection is made, the remaining lands (about 300,000) will be subject to preemption. The reserve adjoins the purchase, and extends westward eighty miles, the first thirty miles wide, and the remainder twenty miles wide—its northern boundary being the Kansas River. All the lands of this reserve (about 1,200,000) are subject to preemption, and more than half of them covered with claims. In all directions, the traveler beholds the log and frame tenement and white tents of the squatters, and everything betokens industry and enterprise.

The Shawnees owe many well cultivated farms, and treat travelers with genuine hospitality. Several missions are located among them. The lands both of the Reserve and Purchase are unsurpassed by any we have ever seen. Those of the Reserve are perhaps the best timbered, and the Purchase the richest soil. Good judges, however, express the opinion that there is timber sufficient for building and fencing purposes on either. It is also a well watered region. The towns are Lawrence, Douglass and Tecumseh—the first 45 miles up the Kansas River, the second 53 miles, and the third 65 miles. Lawrence has a population of about 200 men and perhaps a dozen women, and is an eligible and beautiful site. Douglass we have never visited. Tecumseh is a pretty location, but its lots have never been exposed for sale, and of course there are no inhabitants but the proprietor and his family. Building stone (gray limestone) is found in abundance, croping out in the ravines. Coal has also been discovered, but we believe it has never been sufficiently examined to test its qualities or ascertain the thickness of the veins.

The Piankeshaws and Weas own a small tract, bounded on the north by Shawnee Reserve and on the east by the line of the State of Missouri. They are entitled to make selections for their own use, (numbers of acres not known,) and the remainder of their lands are to be sold to the highest bidder.

The Miamis own lands extending southward from the line of Piankeshaws and Weas, to 38 degrees. The Indians are entitled to make selections of 200 acres to each person, when the remainder will be subject to preemption. The tract is not large, perhaps 20 miles by 15.

The Peorias and Kaskaskias own a small tract west of Weas and Piankeshaws. They are not subject to preemption.

West of Peorias and Kaskaskias is a small tract belonging to Ottawas, not subject to preemption.

The Sacs and Foxes own 455,000 acres, bounded on the north by Shawnee Purchase, and on the east by Ottawas and other lands, not subject to preemption.

The Kansas tribe own 256,000 acres, lying a short distance west of Sacs and Foxes, and south of the Shawnee Purchase. It is distant about ten miles from either of the last two tracts, the intermediate spaces being subject to settlement. The east line of lands of the Kansas Indians is about seventy miles west of the State of Missouri. No treaty has been made with them.

The Pottawatomie nation own thirty miles square, the east line being fifty-four miles west of the State of Missouri, and the Kansas River flowing as nearly through the centre of the tract as could be imagined. It is a well watered, well timbered, fertile country. The Indians have pretty good farms, and raise cattle and horses, and some corn, for market. No treaty has been made with them.

From the foregoing the reader will get some idea of the extent of country open to preemption. All the lands west of about eighty miles from the Territory are neutral lands—that is no Indian tribes have any treaty rights in them, and they are occupied by various wild tribes of Indians, and known as the hunting grounds. They are of course, subject to preemption; but at present so far beyond the verge of civilization as to be undesirable, and treaties will undoubtedly be necessary before settlement. Within the territory extending westward 30 miles from the Missouri line, there is now open to settlement about 4,000,000 of acres, the main bodies being the Shawnee Purchase and that territory lying between the Sacs and Foxes and the south line of the Kansas Territory. These lands, divided into quarter sections to each head of a family, will furnish lands for 25,000 families. Other Indian titles will undoubtedly be extinguished during the coming Winter. There are not now in Kansas to exceed 5,000 inhabitants; so that the reader will observe that there is plenty of room yet. In all these lands that we have seen (and we have been over a considerable portion of them on both sides of the Kansas river,) a man could scarcely select a quarter section which might be called poor land. Let the hardy pioneer come on. There is room for all.

Burning of the Henry Clay—Interesting Trial at Goshen.

The session of the Circuit Court for Orange County commenced, at Goshen, its session on the 13th inst., Hon. J. W. BROWN presiding. The whole week, thus far, has been occupied with the trial of a case arising out of the burning of the steamboat Henry Clay. This action was brought by the Executors of A. J. Downing, deceased, vs. Thomas Collyer and others, owners of the Clay, for the life of Mr. DOWNING, and the baggage of himself and wife. Damages laid at $5,000 for the former, and $1,000 for the latter. To-day, (Friday,) the testimony being all in except that of two witnesses for defence, who had not arrived the Court adjourned until next week, when it will be taken up and disposed of. J. J. MONELL, T. MCKISSOCK, and DICKERSON, for plaintiffs. A. L. JORDAN, A. UNDERHILL, S. J. WILKIN, DAYTON & LEE, for defendants.

From Turks Island—Particulars of the Loss of the American Bark Spencer Kirby.

The bark Spencer Kirby, JOHN TRESCOTHIC master, parted her chain and went ashore at Salt Cay Oct. 29, during a heavy squall, which caused the wind to shift suddenly and she became a total wreck. The S. K. took in a part of her cargo at that island, and was waiting at Salt Cay for favorable weather to finish loading. The hull has since been sold for $1,200.

SALT CAY, Nov. 3.—There is on hand still a small quantity of superior Salt, principally at Salt Cay. There is no prospect at present, we understand, of any more being gathered here this season. Should the weather, however, during the Winter months prove fair, there would be a probability of obtaining early in the coming year an abundant crop. Quantity exported, 29,059; price 30c.; export duty 6½c.

The Recent Assault in Broome-street—Arrest of the Accomplice.

Since the assault committed on Mr. LEACRAFT, on the evening previous to the election, a citizen named BARROW appeared before Judge STUART, at the Second District Police Court, and made a full exposé of the facts connected therewith. The evidence of this witness directly charges a young man called PARSONS with committing the assault. After some search, PARSONS was arrested by Officer EVANS, of the Fifth District Police. In the evening, Justice BOGART was importuned by the prisoner's associates to release the prisoner. Among those who interceded in behalf of the accused were some belonging to the Police Department. The Magistrate, however, refused to interfere in the case.

After the assault was commenced Mr. LEACRAFT lay for nearly forty-eight hours speechless, and no hopes were entertained for his recovery. We learned yesterday that he has much improved, but is yet unable to get out of bed alone. Should he sufficiently recover from his injuries by next month the trial of this case will take place in the General Sessions of December, at which Recorder TILLOU will preside.

The prisoners engaged the services of an eminent lawyer who was elected to a high office at the late election. The counsel made application to bail out the prisoner. On being arraigned before the magistrate, the prisoner waived any investigation; and after being examined according to law, was admitted to bail. JAMES IRVING, of Washington Market, became his bondsman in the sum of $5,000.

Hatchway Accident and Loss of Life.

Another accident by falling through a hatchway, which resulted in the loss of life, occurred on Saturday. The inquest was held at the New-York Hospital by Coroner O'DONNELL, on the body of a young man aged 18 years, named LANDON D. FISH, who was employed at No. 53 Beekman-street, in the store of JAMES WEEKS, Esq. It appears from the testimony, that about 9 o'clock Saturday morning the deceased was engaged hoisting iron from the first to the fifth story of the building, and while so engaged missed his footing and was precipitated from the latter story through the hatchway to the ground. He was taken up insensible, and conveyed to the New-York Hospital, where he died shortly after being admitted. Dr. CHASTENEY made an external examination of the body, and found the head much bruised, also a fracture of the skull, which injuries were the cause of death. The Jury rendered a verdict "that he came to his death by injuries accidentally received from a fall at No. 53 Beekman-street."

Fatal Accidents.

Yesterday morning an inquest was held by Coroner O'DONNELL, at No. 60 Jackson-street, on the body of a child named ALICE WILCOX, who was scalded to death by the upsetting of a tea-kettle filled with hot water. The case was a plain one, and the Jury rendered a verdict accordingly.... An inquest was held at the Morgan Iron Works, by Coroner WILKIE, on the body of a night-watchman named JOHNSON MCGRAW, who fell off the pier and was drowned. Every assistance was rendered by another watchman named JAMES LACY to save the poor man, but without avail. The Jury rendered a verdict of death by accidental drowning.... The same Coroner held an inquest at No. 233 Varick-street, on the body of an infant named W. H. BROWER, who was scalded to death. Verdict accordingly.

Malicious Shooting.

One of the inhabitants of Cow Bay, named JOHN GILLEN, was arrested by Officer O'CONNOR, of the Sixth Ward, on a charge of shooting a little child. It appeared that GILLEN and another lad, as depraved as himself, got into a quarrel, when the former drew a pistol and fired. He missed his aim, and the ball took effect on a little child who was near. GILLEN was locked up. The child, whose name our reporter could not learn, was said to have been conveyed to the hospital, but was so dangerously wounded that its life is despaired of. On inquiry at that institution the officers said no such person had been admitted there.

Alleged Seduction.

Yesterday morning a young blood, named JOHN BROWN, was arrested on a charge of seduction. It appears he had been constant in his visits to a young girl, whose ruin he had effected under the solemn promise of marriage. The evening was designated for the couple to be joined in wedlock, but when the time arrived the bridegroom was not present. The false suitor was finally arrested and arraigned before Judge STUART, at the Jefferson Police Court.

Fire in Broadway.

On Saturday afternoon, about 2 o'clock, a fire occurred in the back cellar of Dr. SAMUEL S. FITCH'S premises, No. 714 Broadway. It seems that a young woman employed in the establishment went to the cellar to draw some alcoholic extract from a barrel, and in so doing she accidentally set it on fire with a candle. She ran out of the cellar and gave the alarm. The firemen were quickly on the spot and extinguished the flames with but very little damage to the building or materials. The loss is covered by insurance.

The Police Commissioners.

The Police Commissioners, after a long vacation, held a brief session on Saturday. The sitting was a private one, and was entirely occupied in the examination of the qualifications of applicants for members of the Police Department.

☞ It is stated that Rev. Mr. PARSONS, the street-preacher, is an applicant for a position in Pelissier's 1st Tenth Police Station. Oh what a fall!" &c.

Good Gun Who Fired!

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I was surprised this morning upon seeing in your paper, that Justice BOGART had issued a warrant against me for alleged conspiracy to obstruct my Wisconsin funds. I called upon Justice BOGART as soon as I saw the article, also, Mr. MOSES called with me; and Justice BOGART had not issued any warrant. The parties are not satisfied with their trade, and took this step to compel me to part with my property without paying the expenses agreed upon. Yours, truly,

J. H. LORD.

Burglar Arrested—Property Recovered.

On Sunday night, the 13th inst., the jewelry store kept by JOHN KEAN, at No. 117½ Court-street, Brooklyn, was entered by burglars and robbed of nearly $2,000 worth of property. On Friday last, Officers RAYNER and HUBBS, of the Chief's Office, received such information that they proceeded to a jewelry store in First-avenue, New-York, kept by a man named CHRISTIAN, whose they succeeded in arresting one of the burglars, who gave his name as LEVI MAYER. They recovered also about half of the property stolen. MAYER was brought to Brooklyn and committed.

Street-Preaching.

There was street-preaching yesterday afternoon on the vacant lot at the corner of Second and North Fifth-streets, Williamsburg, at which quite a large number of persons assembled, owing, probably to the recent excitement in consequence of the election riot that occurred in that vicinity. Mr. YAGER, the German street-preacher, expounded his peculiar doctrines in his mother tongue. The audience looked on in quiet. The Mayor, fearing serious results from a gathering in this quarter, induced Mr. YAGER to leave, and the assemblage soon after dispersed.

Arrest of Incendiaries.

Yesterday afternoon two young men, named EDWARD FAILS and JOHN HUNT, were arrested by Officer COCHER on a charge of setting fire to an unoccupied house in South Second-street, between Sixth and Seventh-streets, Williamsburg, and owned by WM. LAKE. The fire, which was kindled inside with broken boards, was extinguished before any material damage was done. The accused parties were locked up in the First Ward Station-house.

Fire-Alarm Telegraph.

NEW-JERSEY.

☞ A large gathering of the friends of the Bible celebrated the anniversary of the Essex County Bible Society, in the First Presbyterian Church, (Dr. MURRAY'S,) in Elizabethtown, on Tuesday afternoon and evening. The reports showed the year to have been one of unusual success. The annual statement, read by Rev. Mr. SHELDON, Superintendent of the American Bible Society, exhibited the receipts as $4,269 04. Bibles are largely distributed in Newark and other parts of the county. Rev. Dr. DAVIDSON, from Middlesex County, and Rev. Dr. TAYLOR and Rev. C. E. INBRIE, from Hudson County, appeared and represented those Societies as in a flourishing condition. Addresses were made by F. T. FRELINGHUYSEN, Esq., Rev. Jno. MILEY, Rev. J. H. MCNEILL, and Rev. Dr. HEATHER, Secretary of the Home Missionary Society of Ireland.

More Indian Murders.

Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

CAMP ON THE BANKS OF THE PLATTE RIVER, Monday, Oct. 23, 1854.

Another massacre occurred night before last. Our party, composed of eight, camped, on the evening of the 21st inst., at an old camping place of the emigrants, about 200 miles above Fort Kearney, south side of Platte. During the day of the 21st instant, three Indians came and seemed anxious to trade, but were informed by a young man by the name of WOLFE that it was not our object to trade at that time, but he would give them some tobacco, which he did. They then left, and seemed contented.

We were congratulating ourselves on the success of this plan of making the Indians leave without giving them something more valuable, when the crack of a rifle changed our joy into sadness; for by my side fell a promising young man. We grabbed our rifles, and soon reached the wagon; we there had time to ascertain the strength of our enemy; fifteen composed their company. Half naked, half starved, and well armed, they seemed ready for any kind of hellish work. I ordered every man to pick his man, and when I gave the word every rifle told, for seven fell to the ground; and the rest retired for a time in the woods.

We thought that they had left, but WOLFE said that he would go and see; so he went slowly and cautiously toward them; hardly had he advanced twenty paces when eight of them ran toward him. We fired and killed or wounded two, but in turn they killed three of mine, and wounded Mr. WOLFE in the ankle. We ran toward them, and they ran toward the woods. We had the extreme pleasure of seeing them land on the other side of Platte, but not without many a ball passing near their heads or bodies. We then returned to camp. I will give you the names of our company:

Uncerne Wolfe, New-York, wounded; HARVEY WILCOXY, New-York; BENJAMIN WOODS, St. Louis; SAUL MANTEL, St. Louis; SILAS NORWAY, killed; WILLIAM NORWAY, killed; HIRAM WECQUIVER, killed; HENRY LAW, killed.

Office for Emigrants, New-York, Nov. 16, 1854.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In your issue of the 14th, I did not expect to be drawn into a controversy with Capt. E. Sawyer, of the Novra Yacht, by simply stating that the Underwriters were not unwilling to share every, but assist in preventing possible under the circumstances. That the tug boats were, and are, not provided with life-boats and other apparatus for saving life, is the only delay; and is that the Underwriters' fault? One would suppose from Capt. Sawyer's article of this morning, that the Emigrant Aid Company Commission were incorporated for the express purpose of learning and saving life, instead of preventing and that, instead of attending to and saving that for which they associated, they must abandon their property and turn philanthropists. This cannot be expected of any incorporated mercantile institution, but every philanthropist their officers may be in their private capacity.

The city of Galveston, in not having provided the necessary implements and apparatus for saving life, in cases of shipwreck along the coast contiguous to our harbor, lies at the door of every man in the community, according to his ability, and particularly at the door of the "Commissioners of Emigration," who receive one dollar from each of the emigrants who ship for this country; and also of the different benevolent emigrant societies in this City; and, I may add with great propri

Election Results.

We deem it unnecessary to repeat our table of county majorities for Governor this morning. The election of Mr. CLARK, by a plurality varying not far from the 268 votes resulting from our additions on Saturday, is generally conceded. The Albany Evening Journal, after adding a correction of six votes, in favor of CLARK, in Westchester, and four in Madison, and in favor of SEYMOUR of one vote in Yates, claims 283 in the State for Mr. C. The figures in the City of New-York are not likely to be varied materially by the Board of Canvassers, now at work upon them, preliminary to the return to the State Board at Albany.

The other members of the Whig ticket stand thus in 54 of the 59 Counties on Lieutenant Governor; 52 on Canal Commissioner, and 51 on Prison Inspector:

	Whig.	Hard.	Soft.	K. N.
Lieut. Governor	126,057	80,655	122,467	112,671
Canal Commissioner	127,304	77,022	92,922	30,710
Inspector of Prisons	127,007	80,420	90,320	27,307

The footings for the several officers named are for the whole State, with the exception of Erie, Putnam, Schuyler and Fulton and Hamilton on Lieut. Governor; the same Counties, with the addition of Kings and New-York, on Canal Commissioner; and the same Counties, with the addition of St. LAWRENCE, on Inspector of State Prisons. The additions are made by the Evening Journal from the official returns.

The Board of State Canvassers, consisting of the Secretary of State, State Treasurer, Comptroller and Attorney General, meet on Wednesday, 22d inst., to declare the result. They are authorized to remain in session not over five days, and if at the expiration of four days the certified statements from all the County Canvassers are not received, the Board canvass upon such as have been received.

Extension of the European War.

An Irishman convicted of sheep-stealing, a profession which he practiced with considerable constancy and success, was indnced to give particulars of the manner in which he continued to carry on his ovine thefts. The farmers of his neighborhood, it seemed, had taken unusual precautions against such predatory proceedings, but all to no purpose. Paddy Carroll was more than a match for them, until, in a hapless hour, when the whisky was strong and the mind weak, he took a Delilah into his confidence, and was betrayed by her. The confession he made was brief, but comprehensive. "Sir," said he, "I used to hide myself in a hollow which I made in one of the hay-stacks; the sheep, poor creatures, would come up on the cold nights for shelter and for food; and then I used to thrust my arm out, take hold of a sheep by the leg, drag him into the nook where I lay, and having thus enticed him by force, there was nothing easier than to draw a sharp knife across his weazand, and thus prevent his bleating."

Concurrent circumstances, as related in the London and Paris newspapers, lead to the belief that France and England, in despair of obtaining the adhesion of the King of Prussia to their alliance against the Czar, are inclined to follow Paddy's plan, only on a larger scale, and to use a little enticement by force to compel the wine-bibbing head of the House of Brandenberg to cast off his neutrality, and declare with whom he will side. It must be confessed that there are several reasons why the Prussian King should feel great reluctance to taking any decided step against the Czar. In the first place, his sister is Empress of Russia; secondly, he has always been on the very best terms with Russia; and, lastly, in the present uncertainty as to Austria's intended course of policy and action, the King of Prussia considers himself as the representative and champion of Legitimacy in Europe.

Austria, it is clear, will side only with the strongest. If the Anglo-French-Turkish forces succeed in humbling or weakening Russia, there is every ground for believing that Austria will join the winning party—for a time, at least. Gratitude is a word which appears to have slipped out of the vocabulary of Royalty; therefore Austria can conveniently forget the substantial assistance which was given by the Czar, a few years ago, to put an end to the contest which had very nearly eventuated in the Independence of Hungary. But, should NICHOLAS hold his ground against the formidable army now opposed to him, (and we confess that, from the first, we have not yielded to the prevalent fancy of underestimating the endurance or resources of Russia,) Austria is just as likely as not to make or find a pretext for throwing aside the Turkish alliance. The adhesion of Austria to Russia would make a formidable front against France and England. It is evident that the Czar is aware of the slippery policy of the Austrian ruler, for the latest reports declare that he was drawing a large military force towards the Austrian frontier, and had even declared the three Provinces next Austria (Russian Poland, Volhynia and Podolia) to be in a state of siege; Bessarabia, which is the fourth, being already so circumstanced.

Very angry notes are known to have recently passed between France and England on one side, and Prussia on the other. The design of these protocols is to induce Prussia to declare for or against the Czar. There is little prospect of the war being terminated during the present year. In all probability the Allies will have learned wisdom before the commencement of the campaign in 1855. Then, instead of fighting in the Crimea, at the very extremity of the Russian Empire, they may have determined to also carry the war into the vital part—to attack Russia in a central place. This can scarcely be done without the assistance of Prussia, through whose territories the hostile and invading army would have to march, as was done in 1812.

LOUIS NAPOLEON has now an army of 150,000 men in the vicinity of Boulogne, a position whence they could readily march upon Russia. It is alleged that this immense force, which will Winter in its present encampment, is to be sent against Prussia in the Spring, unless FREDERICK WILLIAM join the Alliance against the Czar. LOUIS NAPOLEON, if no other means will do it, (and protocols are only paper pellets,) may desire to entice Prussia by force. An extension of the war appears inevitable, and, should it take place, who knows but that, when the contest is concluded, a new arrangement of European territory may take place, to amend that under the Treaty of Vienna, in 1815, by which France may fulfill her long-cherished dream of once more obtaining the Rhine as one of its boundaries—an arrangement which, as under the elder NAPOLEON, would take a large slice from Prussia? We are very confident that LOUIS NAPOLEON has some political views which he keeps to himself, but bears constantly in mind. By and by, perhaps Prussia may be the "sick man," with France as residuary legatee.

Defects of the City Post-Office.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Nov. 17, 1854.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: My attention has been called to a paragraph in the TIMES of this date, in reference to the finding a package of letters in a canvas mail bag, at your office. I have felt it my duty to investigate the matter, and find the facts to be as follows, as far as they can be ascertained:

On the 9th inst., there were mailed at New-Orleans, three small letter packages for Providence, R. I. According to the usual practice of large offices in mailing to other prominent cities, these packages, constituting the entire mail for Providence, were placed in a canvas bag, and with other similar bags for other points, enclosed in a leather mail pouch for New-York, under what is called the brass lock. On receipt of that pouch at this office, on the night of the 15th inst., it was opened, and the contents, including the aforesaid canvas bag for Providence, taken out and thrown aside to go forward on the following morning. As you are aware, many of the newspaper offices are in the habit of obtaining from the Post-Office empty canvas bags to be filled with newspapers and sent back to the office to go out by the mails. In the instance alluded to, it is supposed that the New-Orleans bag for Providence, which from its small number of packages had the appearance of an empty bag, by some accident got near or among the empty bags, and was taken by the young man employed at the TIMES office, to get their necessary supply of bags.

The construction of the building used for the Post-Office, as is well known, is altogether unfit for the vast amount of business to be transacted. The receipt and dispatch of all the mails being necessarily from the same door, increases the liabilities to such accidents as that to which you allude, and render that degree of vigilance and system which ought to be in force in so important a Post-Office, next to impossible.

In order to prevent such mishaps as the one you refer to, the practice of allowing the bags to be taken to the printing establishments will probably be discontinued as soon as it can be done consistently with the interests of the public press, and the requisite accommodations are secured for the more perfect performance of the immense labors of the New-York Post-Office. J. HOLBROOK,

Special Agent P. O. Dept.

This may be the explanation of the mishap referred to. But it will occur to every one that nothing but carelessness could ever allow mail bags containing letters, to be thrown either "among or near" empty bags, so as to be taken off instead of them.

The inference may be drawn from Mr. HOLBROOK's letter, that the practice of allowing empty mail bags to be taken to the printing establishments is allowed merely for the accommodation of the latter. This is a mistake. On the contrary it is done exclusively for the accommodation of the Post-Office. The business of distributing the newspapers and dispatching each in its proper direction, properly belongs to that office: and it is only from the want of sufficient clerks to do this work, that the newspaper offices have volunteered to do it for them. Bags are accordingly sent up in order that they may be filled with the papers properly distributed before reaching the Post-Office. We shall be very glad to have this practice discontinued, as it will relieve the newspaper establishments from labors and responsibilities that do not belong to them.

But this cannot be done until a better building and a stronger force are provided for the Post-Office. It is a standing disgrace to the Government that the immense postal business of this City should be transacted under circumstances so entirely inadequate. The building now used is not half large enough, nor is it properly arranged for the prompt and correct distribution of the enormous amount of newspapers, letters, &c., that pass through it daily. And the pitiful parsimony of the Government throws all the labors of the office upon a number of clerks far too small for their proper performance. We trust Mr. HOLBROOK will make such representations of this matter to the Department at Washington as its importance merits.

Study of Medicine for Women.

There is a learned profession now in the hands of men which we are inclined to think women will shortly share with them, taking, indeed, the better half to themselves. We mean the Medical profession. We have already seen young women going through the studies and getting the diplomas of that science; and the founding of female medical colleges is spoken of from time to time in the journals. In a late paper we have seen that, at Richmond, in Virginia, they are about building an expensive establishment of the kind. These things give evidence of what promises to be one of the best innovations of the age—one founded upon common sense and common feeling.

Women are the fittest physicians for women. Reason gives them, at one stroke, one half of creation to begin with; and then throws in, along with this grand division, all the little ones of the family of man. We assume that a woman can master all the science and mystery of the healing art as well as a man—though, probably, in the matter of epic poetry, mathematics, statesmanship, or military strategy, she may be obliged to admit an inferior capacity of mind. Medicine is not so very deep and difficult a thing. Care and common sense are, after all, the grand principles of successful practice in the management of the human constitution; and these qualities belong as much to the women as to the men. We can fancy the strong satisfaction with which women would hail the quiet coming into their sick rooms of one of their own sex—a diplomaed and experienced woman; the effect of her mere presence in many cases would go half way to bring about the cure. We need not go into particulars in this argument; the truth of the statement will be generally admitted. In the case of children, too, the gentle and womanly care of a doctress would be most efficacious and happy. We are convinced that the doctress, in managing her patients, would come better to the point and deal more directly and bluntly with the ailments of the young and the old of her own sex—or rather, let us say, the less young—than a man could do. She would be less complaisant and courtly and more familiar in her treatment of them, and thus possess advantages which no medical practitioner of the other sex could hope to compete with. However we look at it, we must conclude that, for half the world, women would make better physicians than men. Nature seems to have decided that. And even for half the other half, we sometimes think the doctresses would be better than the doctors, in dealing with the griefs and evils of sick rooms.

And, coming from particulars to generals, we would contend that every woman, whether she designs to become a medica or not, should have a knowledge of medicine and its effects on the human system, of simples, salves and other useful empiricals. She should also have a general idea of chemistry. We do not know an accomplishment more suited to woman's place in the world than chemistry—not even excepting the piano-forte; for a knowledge of chemical mixtures is indispensable to those who would rightly understand the materia medica. Every mistress of a household or mother of a family should know something of those numerous and profitable facts that are to be gathered within the circle of that science; and, in the case of poisons, should be chemist enough to know what substances act on others, neutralizing them, and how to send an antidote at once after the bane; to send, for instance, down some beloved throat, soda and magnesia after acids, the whites of eggs, lime water or charcoal after arsenic, soap and water after corrosive sublimate, soda or lime after Prussic acid, milk and water after white vitriol, a solution of common salt after nitrate of silver, and so forth; making, at the same time, prompt use of the mustard emetic in the majority of such cases, and applying, with judgment, hartshorn, brandy or other materials, such as would be at hand in most households. A knowledge of these things, and with it a knowledge of other domestic recipes and resources, would be among the best and most admirable acquirements of a woman in any station of life; and it may be confidently asserted, that if it were skillfully practiced, on occasion, ten thousand homes would be spared the agonies and lamentations that constantly come, and will come, to darken their doors and windows. Women would be armed for the most trying emergencies, and be able to save the lives of those dear to them, instead of screaming and wringing their hands, and feeling bitterly that "ignorance is the curse of God." And, in a general way, a knowledge of the laws of health would make every women the protecting genius of her household, and teach her how to treat her children in any sudden or ordinary case of sickness or accident. Especially as regards children, every mother should be a doctress. The ignorance of parents is fatal to almost half the children that come into the world; it is more deadly and deplorable than the vices of adult years—than "battle, murder and sudden death." It is a melancholy thing to see the physical preservation and training of young children in the hands of those to whom persons of judgment would not entrust the life of a kitten. Women now-a-days are for the most part unprepared by education to act their parts well in their most important sphere—that of home. Their grand-mothers and great-grand-mothers and so, still further back, were much more accomplished in everything that truly becomes a woman to know. They had a knowledge of a great many useful things—knew excellent recipes in cookery and chemistry, were learned in the virtues of herbs and decoctions; and, "puddering with physic," like Lord VERULAM, were generally aware of the efficacies of domestic medicine. They were prepared for most accidents, and nothing—if we except gun-shot wounds or the burning of the house—could have the effect of putting them to a new plus. Their fair descendants, compared with such excellent examples of housewifery and skill, are, so to speak, Know-Nothings—which we greatly grieve to say.

We repeat—hoping there are many of our readers who will remember and improve the observations we thus hastily put before them—that a tolerable knowledge of medicine and an acquaintance with the nature of acids and alkalies, would be one of the most blessed accomplishments of the ladies—one of the richest dowries they could bring with them into the newly furnished houses of their husbands on the wedding-day; and that the regular practice of physic by the sex would have the best effect on the health, morally as well as physically, of the larger half of society. This science and profession need not take woman out of her own sphere. It demands no unsexing, like that which would belong to Bloomerism and the ballot-box. It leaves to the sex all that ever made it charming—and would only add to the attractions of Venus the grave wisdom of Pallas. Without making any violent strides over a barrier which must always remain, woman, in her own becoming way and attitude, may find in the theory and practice we speak of the best means of putting herself as near the level of the man as she can ever reach, and thus gratify the highest ambition she may be willing to entertain. As the physicians of more than a moiety of creation, and the intelligent mentors and preservers of their households and families, we have no doubt that, in the course of time, women will vindicate in a nobler way than they have yet done, their claim to be styled the better half of the world.

English and American Troops.

An English correspondent sends us a communication in reply to our remarks on the battles of the Alma and of Mexico,—the gist of which is contained in the following:

"The troops engaged on the American side in the Mexican war were certainly raw recruits, in a great measure, and had they had to encounter what the allies had at the Alma, would undoubtedly have been exterminated; but the Mexicans, against whom they fought, were never particularly noted for valor—in fact, the lack of efficient generals and the cowardice of the troops in general, made them objects more of pity than of vengeance."

And the same writer adds:

"If you wish to draw a comparison between the soldiers of the allied armies and those of the American, the present war in which the former are engaged will not do, and the only one that I can see in which you can draw a parallel is the British in the war in China, and the Americans in that of Mexico; in these two there is a vast similarity."

Our correspondent is an Englishman, and complains that the American press does not enter with thorough zeal into the rejoicings of his countrymen over the valor of their troops and their victories at the Alma. Yet he repeats with augmented insolence, the sneers of other English writers at the American victories in the Mexican war, and betrays either a shameless mendacity or a degree of ignorance which disqualifies him from saying anything on the subject. He says the Mexicans were cowards, and did not fight well. How then, came they to inflict such terrible losses on the American troops? Did the British in any of their Chinese engagements lose one-seventh, or one-fifth, of their force, as the Americans did in Mexico,—or even one-fifteenth as the Allies did at the Alma? The Mexicans fought well in nearly every battle of the campaign. They were regular troops,—were thoroughly disciplined, and well armed with weapons of British manufacture, and had seen quite as much active service as the Russian soldiers against whom the Allies are fighting in the Crimea. In fact, they stood their ground better, and inflicted heavier losses on their opponents than did the Russians upon the British and French forces against whom they fought. Another point our correspondent has entirely overlooked;—at the Alma the Allies largely outnumbered the Russians; while in not a single battle during the whole Mexican campaign, was the American force one-half as great as that of the Mexicans which it engaged.

We are aware that this is comparatively a small matter in itself;—but it illustrates an injustice at which we have a right to complain. The English are now exacting from us a fraternity of sympathy and admiration. They call on us to echo the praises of their soldiers, and we have done so fully and heartily. Our newspapers have been filled from day to day with the record of their exploits. Yet the slightest intimation that Americans have fought well also in times past, is received with incredulity and insult. And during the whole Mexican war,—when Americans fresh from the pursuits of civil life, utterly untrained to arms as well as unused to war,—met and routed regulars outnumbering them fourfold, leaving a fifth of their own number dead on the field,—the English press could never bring itself to do more, in the way of recognition, than occasionally to chronicle the superiority of Anglo-Saxon blood, and to sneer at the Mexicans as unworthy the name of a military foe. It is such gross and insulting injustice as this that breeds bad blood between the people of these two great nations,—and the feeling it engenders is not to be allayed by soft words or a pretended community of interests and of political opinion.

☞ The Historical Society has made arrangements for a magnificent celebration of its Semi-Centennial Anniversary to-day, as will be seen by the programme, which is given in another column. Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT delivers the Address at Niblo's, at 3 o'clock, P. M., and the Members of the Society, with a large number of invited guests, among whom EDWARD EVERETT, ROBERT C. WINTHROP, Rev. Dr. ADAMS and others are expected, will dine at the Astor House in the evening. The occasion cannot fail to be one of very great interest.

Father Hendy's Case.

It is a great pity that good men everywhere cannot work together amicably, and leave the business of their persecution to those who are their natural enemies. But it always has been, and probably will a while longer, be the case that the worst "digs under the ribs" that we get will come from men of the same name and faith, and the hardest stabs inflicted upon good man's reputation and peace will come from those who profess to work in the same field.

Father BRADY, of Hartford, Conn., has long been identified with the growth of the Catholic Church in that vicinity. When he went there, near a score of years ago, the Catholics were but a handful. Under his careful watch they grew to be strong and prosperous. Most of the people of those parts are "down on Catholics," but when any one spoke of the encroachments of Papists, he generally added, "If they were all like Father BRADY" we would not worry about their growth.

They built a fine Cathedral for Father BRADY, and things went on swimmingly till the Bishop came to town, and questions of the ownership and control of the Church property began to be agitated. By degrees, one privilege after another was forbidden the old man, till a week or so before he died it was announced that he must not preach in the Cathedral any more—another having been appointed to stand in his place. He died,—killed, they say, by trouble,—and being dead the Bishop refused him churchyard burial. The people buried him, however, where he had expressed a wish to be buried, and had Mass said in spite of the Bishop. This is a very curious case,—it is only one indication, however, that within the Church there is an uneasy tolerance of Ecclesiastical Despotism, and a determination to worship, though with Masses, and in the midst of pictured and sculptured saints, and in the words and form of the Litany, yet with freedom and self-respecting independence. In our telegraphic column and in extracts which we present from the Hartford Times, the particulars of this affair may be gathered.

Hard Times and Prisons.

At the late meeting of the British Scientific Association, Rev. W. CLAY read a paper on the Effects of Good and Bad Times upon the Committals to Prison. The reverend gentleman has been intimately acquainted with the Lancashire County Prison for 29 years, and bases his conclusions on the facts there found. He says that the committals are most frequent in times when work is plenty and well paid, and wages good, and that they decrease as Hard Times appear. This is contrary to the general impression, which is that poverty is the great procurer of crime, and pressing want the immediate inducement to its commission. Perhaps we do too much forget that in their want those who are not grossly ignorant cherish their innocence and virtue as their main support in suffering. Novels and their sentimental authors have done much to bring us to feel that most criminals are the victims of circumstances, and that rogues should be treated simply as "poor unfortunates,"—while there is no doubt that an overweening vanity, an undue appreciation of one's own consequence, and too great haste to be rich, to which more or less the whole question is trained, bring more to the prison than real want or the temptations of sudden suffering. It is indeed true that many things which are heinous sins in a poor man are forgiven to a man of wealth. Perhaps this very watch that we set over the poor is their protection, while the rich indulge their habits unchecked until they tread unwittingly over the line which separates "respectable" from outrageous dishonesty, and are plunged at once into disgrace.

Young Men's Christian Association.

We would call the attention of young men who visit the City for the Winter, or who permanently locate here, to the Christian Association. This body consists of a large number of young persons who are connected with the several different religious sects; united together for each other's intellectual and moral benefit. They have monthly meetings which are very largely attended and are full of interest. A handsome reading-room, with some of the best periodical literature of the day on its tables, and a growing library, are open, we believe, every evening for the use of members. The social advantages of the Association are obvious. Many a young man enters the City with scarcely a friend to look to for advice in an emergency or for company in his unemployed hours. The Association seeks to find out such, to introduce them to others of like sympathies, to cultivate worthy acquaintance and cement friendship. Then it keeps each one interested in the great efforts made by the best people of the City to help the poor, befriend the friendless, guide the wandering and conserve the public morals. Every young man must prefer to surround himself with healthful influences, and here one will be quite sure so to surround himself. One of the Monthly Meetings occurs to-night at the Association Rooms in Clinton Hall, Astor-place. We speak without authority, but, we presume that a visit there from any young man will be welcome.

☞ The Richmond Examiner and other Southern ultra pro-Slavery journals, are rejoicing lustily over the defeat of MYRON H. CLARK for Governor and the Prohibitory Liquor Law, and the election of a Legislature which will not return Senator SEWARD to Washington. We do not doubt the sincerity of their joy, but are a little puzzled to know what face they will put on the matter when they learn the facts.

Youths' Bermuda Bible and School Society.

A meeting of the members of this Society was held in the Oliver-street Church last evening, to celebrate the Eighteenth Anniversary of the Society. A large number of persons were in attendance, including the youthful members, who participated a very interesting exposition. The exercises of the occasion were opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. WESCOTT; after which the Secretary read the annual report, in which it was stated that the Society felt seriously a financial depression, principally attributable to the steady removal to the upper part of the City, thus thinning the Sabbath Schools, and with it the Society. The sum of $654 26 was collected during the year past. Many heathens have been converted—particularly in Burmah, $100 has been subscribed for the purpose of distributing library books to the wilds of the Far West, which shows that their efforts are not confined to Burmah, forgetful of the claims of our country. Appropriate addresses were then delivered by C. S. WEST, Esq., and Rev. WESTLOCK H. PARSLY, of Jersey City.

KIDNAPPING.—On Sunday evening last, a colored woman, named JANE MOORE of this city, was called to her door, knocked down, placed in a carriage, and lodged in jail in Covington, on the plea that she was a fugitive slave, owned in the city of Maysville, Ky. The woman was taken by some of her friends before Mayor FOLEY, of Covington, and her freedom established. The kidnappers, seeing their game, their outrageous conduct would be exposed, fled, alleging that they were in search of the owner of the woman.

One night last week, several men from Kentucky, guided and aided by an Ohio, kidnapped a young negress near Georgetown, Ohio, and conveyed her to Maysville, where they kept her concealed for two days, when she made her escape, and gave information which led to the arrest of these brothers, named HENRY, LEWIS and ALSEN YOUNG, who were committed to jail to await trial. This glaring atrocity was rightly denounced by the people of Maysville, who became intensely excited on the subject, and held a large meeting at the Court-House, on the evening of the 12th inst., to devise means for the public safety. There appears to be a gang of consummate scoundrels located somewhere about Maysville, and it is to be hoped that the deep indignation roused among the people of that town will have a salutary effect.—Cincinnati Commercial, Nov. 17.

MORE PROSCRIPTION.—We publish an account of the dismissal of a deputy postmaster in Butler County (who, though a Democrat in politics, was universally acceptable to the people within the delivery of his office) because he chose to vote for an anti-Nebraska candidate at the last election. The incumbent in this case had been in the office 20 years under all sorts of Administrations, and had given entire satisfaction to the people, that no man in all the neighborhood could be found who would sign a petition for his removal. Nevertheless, he was turned out by our Roman Catholic Postmaster General, and a Roman Catholic foreigner appointed in the place of the old pioneer.

The work of proscription has commenced in Indiana, also. The Brookville American brings us an account of the guillotining of WILLIAM MIXER, Deputy Postmaster at Trinersville, and the appointment of a foreigner named WILLIAMS in his place. MIXER is a Democrat, but he could not go the Nebraska bill; besides he was a Presbyterian. This was too much for Roman Catholic Postmaster-General CAMPBELL, so he turned him out, and appointed a Roman Catholic to the office. These cases have naturally produced a great deal of excitement.—Cincinnati Gazette, Nov. 16.

STEAMER FORESTER BURNED—FOUR LIVES LOST.—This morning, at 1 o'clock, the steamer Forester, then at the New Richmond landing took fire and burned to the water's edge. The steward, chambermaid, one cabin boy and a deck hand, are reported to have been consumed in the fire. The Forester was a light, trim, stern-wheel boat, built less than a year since at Pittsburg. She was owned by Messrs. REED & SHANNON, who valued her at upwards of $20,000. We understand she was insured in the Western Office, in Pittsburg, and in other offices, for $15,000.

She was chartered a few days since, by the New Richmond Packet Company, at $75 per day, and was supplying the place of the Lancaster in the trade between this city and New-Richmond. She left here about 5 o'clock yesterday evening, and had not been in port more than an hour when the fire broke out.—Cincinnati Times, Nov. 14.

MAJOR WOOD, UNITED STATES ARMY.—Intelligence has been received at Washington of the death, in Texas, by yellow fever, of Brevet Major GEORGE W. P. WOOD, of the United States Army. Major WOOD was the son of the venerable WM. B. WOOD, of Philadelphia, and the news of his death, while it will fall with peculiar severity upon his parent, will be received with pain by a large circle of acquaintances in his native city. Major WOOD entered the Army as a second Lieutenant of Infantry in 1838. By efficient service he advanced rapidly, and for gallant conduct in the Mexican War was breveted a Major. His fellow-citizens of Philadelphia showed their sense of his bravery by presenting him with an elegant sword. He has for some years been stationed at one of the frontier posts of Texas. He leaves a wife and family, and numerous friends, in and out of the army, to lament his death.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—Nov. 18.

Ketchin vs. Stewart.—This was a motion that the executors have proceeded in the case be directed to pay to Wm. C. Bryant & Co. rent due. The facts are as follows:

On the 1st day of February, 1847, William C. Bryant & Co. leased a house to John Bennett, of certain premises on the easterly corner of Pine and Nassau-streets, for the term of seven years and three months ending on the 1st day of May, 1854, at the yearly rent of $2,000. The assignment was made April 27, 1852, for the remainder of the term of Wm. C. Bryant & Co.'s lease.

On or before the 1st of November, 1853, Ketchin paid half the lease to Charles F. Hunnewell, on that day Ketchin (?) to suspend dancing, and to carry on the business for the purpose of carrying on the ownership of keeping a French and American Restaurant on the premises; the articles of Copartnership set forth their signal, mortgaged ownership of the house which was to be bought by them, and equal bonds of the firm.

The firm failed in business, and on or about the seventh day of May, 1853, Benjamin T. Kinnan, Esq., was appointed receiver of the property of the firm.

On the first day of May, 1853, $[illegible] was due William C. Bryant & Co. for back rent of the premises, the holders of the two leases, during which they were occupied by Hamlin Ketchin & Stoppani, having been paid by them. Wm. C. Bryant & Co. commenced proceedings to dispossess the tenants, which were discontinued by them on the receiver paying the amount due, with the costs of the proceedings to dispossess.

The rent of the premises for the remaining term of the original lease was paid to William C. Bryant & Co. by the receiver, on the several quarter days on which it fell due, with the exception of the last quarter of the term, ending May 1, 1854.

During the remainder of the term after the receiver's appointment the rents of the sub-tenants already in possession were collected by and paid to the receiver. The part of the premises not already occupied, except a room or two, was underlet by the receiver in his own name and the rents collected by him.

The motion was granted.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN—THREE GOLD AND SEPARATE MONEY.

Switzer vs. Valentine.—This action was brought by Mr. Switzer against Mr. Valentine, to recover damages for the entry into his house by the defendant, and the wrongful taking therefrom of household furniture owned by him. The defendant, in his answer, alleged that one Caroline Switzer was the owner of the furniture, and had executed a chattel mortgage of it to the defendant, and that he took it under this chattel mortgage. Upon the trial it appeared that Caroline Switzer was the wife of the plaintiff. That she had earned on a business in her own name, and had purchased the furniture in question, or at least a part of it, from the defendant Valentine, in her own name and upon her own credit, giving him a note and a chattel mortgage upon the furniture, as security for the note. The question in the case was whether the property was her sole and separate property which she might mortgage in her own name.

BOWNTRE, J., after stating the facts in the case, proceeded as follows:

Prior to the acts of 1848 and 1849, allowing married women to take, hold and dispose of property, as if they were single, and unmarried, there was no doubt that her gift, purchases made by the wife with the knowledge and consent of the husband, and especially where her goods bought came to his possession, in the manner and to the extent that the articles in question did, he would be liable to the vendor for the price.

In this case, many of the articles mortgaged to the defendant were bought by him. Some were purchased with part of the money of the plaintiff. Some were bought by the defendant and sent to her by his order, and the price formed part of the amount of the note which the mortgage was given to secure, and the articles themselves were covered by the mortgage. Of the latter class were the articles bought of Dwight Bishop, by the defendant, and the bill or them amounted to $153.

Have the acts of 1848 and 1849 any bearing upon the questions arising in this action? By these acts, she may take by gift or grant, from any person except her husband, either real or personal property, and hold, convey, or devise it, or any interest in it, with like effect, as if she were unmarried. Does this do more than to capacitate a married woman to hold in her own a separate property, and to dispose of it as effectually as if she were unmarried? Is not the whole capacity which is given to her to purchase, limited to purchases which she may make on the credit of her separate estate, or for which she may pay with such estate, or parts of it?

And is not all the new capacity which is given to her to convey or devise, limited to a conveyance or devise of her separate property?

Can a married woman, who has no separate estate, make any valid contract which she could not have made before these acts were passed?

In the present case there is no pretense that Caroline Switzer owns any separate estate. Even the property, bought by Valentine, was not given to her, for she gave her note for it. Was it granted to her within the meaning of these acts, so as to make it her individual property?

It went to the plaintiff's house and possession; it was appropriated to his use, by being employed in a business prosecuted as a means of supporting his family. He is liable in law for its price, and it could be taken on execution to satisfy his debts. In judgment of law it was sold to him and was his property.

Broadway vs. Cooper, 16 B. Barb. S. C. R., 556.

We see no reason to grant a new trial, on account of any charge made at the trial, or on account of any refusal to charge as requested by the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

ADJOINING LAND OWNERS—PARTY WALLS.

Rae vs. Del Vecchio.—This was an action to recover damages of the defendants for injuries done to the house No. 496 Broadway by excavating under a party wall and causing it to settle and sink.

It seems that Rae is the owner of house No. 498 Broadway and Del Vecchio of the house No. 494 immediately adjoining. These houses were erected by one Israel Lawrence in 1818, contemporaneously, and the two houses were separated by a party wall which formed a common support for them both. The defendant Del Vecchio stayed Mr. Sneider, who was the tenant, and had several alterations in his house No. 494, in the course of which, without giving Rae any notice, he excavated on the centre of the party wall which was the dividing line between the two lots. The result was a pretty severe injury to the Mr. Rae's house. It was to recover damages for this injury that this action was brought.

Upon the trial each of the defendants offered his co-defendant as a witness. They were, however, rejected by the Court, and exceptions was taken.

The principal stir arose upon the trial as to the rights of the parties in the common wall, under the facts set forth in the case. The opinion of the Court on matters of interest upon this point: It was rendered by BOWNTRE, J.—The each defendant is a competent witness for his co-defendant, in an action of tort, has been repeatedly determined by the Court of Appeals. Beals vs. Finch, et al. 1 Kernan, R. 128.

That action was tried after § 397 of the Code was amended by the act of 1851. The decision in Beals vs. Finch, is, therefore, conclusive as to the right of each defendant, in this action, to examine his co-defendant, as a witness in his own behalf. The relevancy or competency of any evidence proposed to be given by a co-defendant, can only be determined in the trial. In this case, the witness was absolutely excluded, and for aught the Court can know, it was in the power of each to prove by the other, matters pertinent and material to the issues raised in the action. There cannot, therefore, be a new trial, because neither defendant was permitted to testify for the other.

But the most important question in the cause, as we have before said, is that which relates to so much of the charge to the Jury as stated the liability of the defendants, resulting from not notifying the plaintiff of the defendants' intention, to interfere with the party wall. The charge, as given, withdrew from the consideration of the jury the question whether the repairs were done in a skillful and careful manner, so as to avoid any unnecessary injury. It assumed that the work had been done with care and skill. The Jury were instructed "that if they should find that the plaintiff had no notice or knowledge of the intention of the defendant to move or interfere with the party wall in question; and that the plaintiff, by having had notice, could have saved himself from injury, the defendants, notwithstanding they might have done the work in question with care and diligence, are liable to the plaintiff for any injuries sustained by him in consequence of not having given him notice of the intended alterations."

We all assent in the opinion that there is nothing in this part of the charge of which the defendants can complain. We have no doubt (but in any view of the rights and liabilities of the parties) that if the plaintiff, the plaintiff was at all events entitled to notice, and if that was not given, he is entitled to recover such damages, as upon the receipt of it he might have avoided by reasonable care and precaution to protect and support the building.

It is obvious, however, that this rule may not be the one by which the liabilities of the parties must be tested in this case, as they may possibly appear on a new trial. A notice to the plaintiff may possibly be proved by testimony credible to both defendants; and the facts may appear to be such as will present the question whether either defendant had any right to interfere with the wall at all, without the plaintiff's consent, unless he shall do so without injury to the plaintiff's building.

Although the plaintiff and Del Vecchio severally owned in fee to moiety of the wall as stood upon his own lot, yet if both had an easement in the residue of the wall for the support of their respective buildings, in order to constitute a division wall, so as to make it a tenant in common, it must be shown that the owners of the adjoining buildings were in undivided moieties the land on which the wall was built, and that there was a division between the owners of the adjoining buildings, severally binding them, their heirs and assigns, that the division will stand in and remain a party wall. If the owners of adjoining lots are building upon them, each by himself, and without a division wall partly on the land of each, at their joint expense, for the purpose of supporting such buildings, and which is essential to such support, and for an H. for every twenty years, the wall becomes a party wall, within the proper meaning of that term. So if one person owns both lots, and erects buildings on both, with a wall standing between each for the purpose of supporting such buildings, and which is necessary for their support, and subsequently, while that wall is continuing to be so used, conveys one house and lot by metes and bounds, and by boundaries, one of which runs along the centre of said wall, the grant will carry not only the absolute title to the premises specifically conveyed, but will also pass to an appurtenance to the grant, an easement in the residue of the division wall for the support of the house granted.

We think a reference to adjudged cases, will show that these principles are well settled.

The learned Judge proceeded to quote and comment upon the following authorities: (Campbell vs. Mesier, 4 Johns. Ch. R., 334; Sherred vs. Cisco; Brown vs. Palmer; Matson vs. Hawkins, 3 Taunton; Gibbons vs. Mapplebeck; Boulbury vs. Clutton's Hospital, 4 Mad. and C., 714, 760; Commercial Dispatch Newspaper Co. vs. Gannett vs. Porter, 6 Barr. and C., 267; S. C. 9 C. B. N. S. 327; D. S. vs. Appleton, 1 Sumn., 492, 500; Wright vs. Freeman, 5 Harris and J., 477; Hyde vs. Thornborough, 2 Cor. and Kir., 250; Lassie vs. Holbrook, 4 Paige 170; Palmer vs. Pinchon, 1 Sidr. 167; Cox vs. Mathews, 1 Vent., 237; Story vs. Odes, 12 Mass., 127; Brown vs. Windsor, 1 Cromp. and Jer.) He then proceeded as follows:

The rules to be extracted from all these cases, and from the dicta of Judges of what they regarded as undoubted law, so far as they are necessary to be stated to meet the questions that may arise in this case, would seem to be these:

1. If the owner of two adjoining lots erects buildings upon them, with a wall partly on each, to be used as a support in both buildings, and which is necessary to furnish such support, and which is used for that purpose from the time of its erection, a conveyance of either house and lot with its appurtenances, grants an easement for the support of the house so conveyed, in so much of the wall as stands on the other lot.

2. After such a grant, and a continued use of such party wall to support both buildings for more than twenty years, neither can remove the wall, nor so deal with it as to render it an insufficient support for the other's building, without his consent. If he does, he is liable for the injury caused thereby.

3. If either wishes to improve his own premises, before the party wall has become ruinous, or incapable of further answering the purposes for which it was erected, he may underpin the foundation, sink it deeper, and increase within the limits of his own lot, the thickness, length, or height of the party wall, if he can do so without injury to the building on the adjoining lot. And to avoid causing such injury, he may shore up and support the original party wall, if reasonable, to excavate and place a new underpinning beneath it.

4. But he cannot interfere with it in any manner, unless he can without injury to the adjoining building, or without the consent of the owner of such building.

Whether in such a case, he can raise the whole party wall higher, or whether any additional elevation must be wholly within the limits of his own lot, it is unnecessary now to decide.

Unless these rights are necessarily incident to such an ownership in such party wall, it is difficult to say on what principle either owner has any valuable right or privilege in it. If either may pare off so much of the wall as is upon his own lot, notwithstanding it may so weaken the residue of the wall that it cannot stand, or if either may excavate under so much of the wall as is upon his own land, though the necessary consequence be, that so much of the wall as is on the other lot will fall; then it follows, that the purchaser from the owner of both, does not acquire, by a grant of one house and lot, with the appurtenances, a right to the use of all that is absolutely indispensible to the enjoyment and security of the house built, although it was in use as a part of the house at the time the house was granted.

If either may, as a matter of strict right, take down or pare off so much of the wall as is on his own lot, although the owner must necessarily fall, or will be endangered, insufficient to support the adjoining building, then it is not of the power of the latter to protect himself from it by his leases. Notice may enable him to shore up his building, until he can erect a new wall wholly on his own land, but it will not enable him to sustain his own half of the wall, and make it strong enough to uphold his building, when it is itself incapable of standing after the other half has been pared off or taken down.

The owner of a lot, having a building with independent walls standing wholly upon it, is entitled to notice from the owner of an adjoining lot, who intends to build on the latter and so improve it, as to make it necessary for the security of the former's house that it should be shored up and supported during the progress of the work. The end giving the notice, even in such a case, is also bound to exercise care and skill in improving his own lot, and from any injury resulting to the other from a breach of that duty he will be liable.

I see no middle course in such cases, between holding either that one of the owners of the two adjoining buildings, having such a party wall for the support of both, cannot move or impair the stability of the wall without the other's consent, or that each has an absolute and exclusive a dominion over so much of the wall as stands on his own lot, as he would have had, if it had been erected as a separate and independent wall. If the latter rule be adopted, it must also be held, that although the owners of adjoining lots erect buildings upon them, with a party wall for the support of both, standing, by common consent, one half on each lot, and by agreement built at joint expense, yet the moment after they are completed, or after the wall has stood and been used, as a party wall, long enough to justify the presumption of a grant where the possession is adverse, either may take down so much of such wall as is on his own lot, although as an inevitable consequence, the other half must fall.

The latter doctrine is repugnant to natural justice and equity, and I have not found any authorities which sanction it. The contrary doctrine is in accordance with the most obvious principles of justice and good faith, and with express decisions; is supported by the opinions of eminent jurists expressed without hesitation or qualification, and does not interfere with either party in making any kind of improvements upon his own lot, which do not involve a breach of duty to, or the practice of bad faith towards the other.

The case now before us does not show whether Isaac Lawrence died seized of the house and lot now owned by Del Vecchio or whether he conveyed it in his life time. If he conveyed it in his life time, the terms of the grant may have a controlling influence upon the question whether this wall is to be regarded as a party wall, within the meaning of the decisions to which reference has been made. The terms of the grant may be such as to preclude those claiming it, and also his grantees of No. 496 Broadway from claiming any easement in so much of the wall as is not conveyed to them, respectively, or they may expressly declare it to be a party wall, or the premises with the appurtenances may be conveyed by metes and bounds, which run one of the boundary lines through the centre of the wall.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered, with costs to abide the event.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Guynet vs. Mantel.—The facts of this case are these: On the 20th February, 1853, a contract was made between Mantel and Guynet for the purchase of some lots on the corner of Broadway and Forty-seventh-street for $50,000, payable ten per cent. in cash, and 20 per cent. on delivery of the deed; the balance was to remain on bond and mortgage, payable in not less than five years. The deed was to be a warranty deed, and to be delivered on the 20 May, 1853. When this contract was made there was a mortgage upon the premises for $1,600, given by Mantel to a Mr. Parish, payable the 24th January, 1854. This mortgage was known to Guynet. After the day the plaintiff exercised various acts of ownership over the property, such as renting the lease it, &c. At the time of making the cash payment of 20 per cent. Mr. Guynet applied for an extension of the time, but Mr. Mantel declined to give it.

Mr. John E. Stephens then, without Mantel's knowledge, procured an assignment of Mr. Parish's mortgage to a Mr. Tools in order to use it for the benefit of Guynet. Mr. Tools was not aware of the transaction and never paid anything for such assignment. Mr. Mantel afterwards called upon Mr. Tools and requested him to accept payment of the mortgage, which he declined to do, as it was not due. He made the same request to Mr. Stevens, which was refused. Thereupon, as he could not satisfy the mortgage, he tendered a deed containing covenants of warranty and against encumbrances, and on the 24 May tendered it and requested Guynet's acceptance, offering to deduct the amount of the mortgage from the purchase money. Guynet refused to accept the deed until the mortgage was satisfied of record. He then commenced an action to recover the 10 per cent. paid, and for damages, and Mantel commenced a cross-suit to compel specific performance of the contract. The causes were referred on the 7th January last to Mr. William Kent, who made a decision directing such specific performance. The case is now brought on appeal from that decision.

Judge HOFFMAN rendered the opinion of the Court. He said, that if the plaintiff could obtain substantially that for which he contracted, if the deficiency in the quantity of the estate was such that it could be made the subject of compensation, and if such compensation could be made consistently with the conditions that the purchaser would not have obtained the interest had he known of the deficiency or burden, then the Court will enforce it upon him. Could it be rationally imagined, that if the mortgage and its terms had been fully known at the date of the contract, the purchaser would have refused to enter into it. This was the strongest form in which the question could be placed in his favor. Moreover, the notice which the plaintiff had of the mortgage was sufficient to put him upon the inquiry which could at once have been satisfied.

The judgment of the referee affirmed.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY—DEFENCE OF PARTIES.

Lehlenbeg vs. Krell.—This was an action by the plaintiff against Herman and Caroline Krell. There was no allegation in the complaint that the defendants were man and wife. A general verdict was rendered for the plaintiff for the sum of $100.

Held by the Court, per CAMPBELL, J.—That the verdict was not good. As it did not appear that the parties were man and wife, and as it was impossible for the Court to say against which of the defendants the judgment should be entered, there should be a new trial, with costs to abide the event.

BREACH OF PROMISE.—This action was brought to recover damages for injuries occasioned to the plaintiff's reputation by a collision with the defendant's. No question of law was raised on the trial, the only question being whether the verdict, which was for the plaintiff, was against the evidence, that the Court ought to set it aside. The Court thought not, and the judgment was affirmed, with costs.

American Conference in Europe.

From the London Spectator.

The explanation of the motive and purpose of a conference of American Ministers on the European Continent is intelligible—is consistent with the progress of America in power and influence, and with the present posture of affairs. The concert was most come to an end sooner or later. There is no expectation in America, any more than in England, that it will terminate within a twelvemonth from this period; it may terminate sooner, or be protracted indefinitely longer. At the conclusion there will of course be a congress to settle the conditions of peace and the relations of litigants; and at that congress America, in some way or other, intends to be present. By the previous conference, now pending, will the American Government be assisted in preparing to advance its claim in the manner most conducive to American influence, and least alarming or offensive to other parties engaged. There is a strong feeling in the United States that a better understanding reciprocally of the views entertained in Europe and in America would obviate interruptions to friendly feeling.

As an example of the subjects upon which America is misunderstood, Cuba is instanced; and the question of right and wrong in that matter is of course distinct from the question respecting the nature of American motives and views. A thoroughgoing patriot of the Republic is proud to boast that no land has been annexed to the United States without having been duly acquired under treaty, and even paid for. France was paid for Louisiana, Spain for Florida, the Indians are compensated for their ceded land; and even Mexico, beaten as she was, received a price, with which she professed to be contented, for California. "Lawless annexation" is not desired—is disliked. During the troubles of 1837, when the Canadians declared themselves on various grounds to be oppressively treated by Great Britain, there were organizations along the whole extent of the Western border, for the purpose of assisting the colonists in a stand-up fight to conquer their liberty and independence. It was not solely by abstract political principles that the Americans were moved. A very great number had personal relations with individuals on the British side of the border. Sprung from the same stock, bearing the same names, speaking the same language, they were, sometimes literally, cousins; and when Tom Styles on the North of the border declared in the tone of complaint that he was wrongously treated, John Nokes on the South side told his old woman that he was thinking of taking his side and being off for a month or two to help his cousins in getting their own. The Government at Washington felt an anxiety on that subject which could scarcely be appreciated in this country; since here our Government either absolutely concurs in any object supported by the popular acclaim, or is possessed the power to suppress an irregular manifestation of general opinion. Any Government with responsibilities beyond the frontier would be desirous to restrain the action of its citizens upon foreign ground; but the American Government, subject to the body of citizens, does not possess the imperial power to "put down" the people. The Canadian knot was cut by the British Government, which instituted a liberal policy in Canada, superseded internal questions of fusion and disaffection, rendered Canada tranquil, annulled the occasion for American sympathy, and relieved the Executive at Washington from anxiety. No one hears of Canadian annexation now; no one fears border troubles; and the Executive is applauded in passing reciprocity treaties with Lord Elgin.

Viewed in this manner from Washington, the case of Cuba appears strictly analogous to that of Canada. Whatever grand distinctions we may see, the American statesman at once discerns exactly the same troubles in the direction of Cuba that it escaped in the direction of Canada. There is far more widespread connection between the Spanish island and the Anglo-American States than we always remember. Havana is an agreeable place in Winter, with a softer air than most of the American towns can boast, with varied entertainments, and a pleasant society. It is therefore much frequented by Americans who dread or dislike a harsh Winter. On the other hand, unwholesome even for the Creoles in Summer, it is deserted by many of them, who rush to the watering-places of the Union, and there form another round of personal acquaintance. The Americans in Cuba acquire a strong sympathy for a European race under great and mortifying subjection. Offices of trust, political power, exercises of authority, are monopolized for Spaniards born. They alone are trusted; they can mulct the islanders; they can pocket pelf; and they can insult those whom they oppress. Again, the Cuban visiting the Republic acquires a strong liking for the personal freedom which he finds enjoyed by everybody with a white skin. He returns imbued with an Anglo-Saxon view of public policy. He becomes "suspect;" and probably, if there is any insurrection to repress, the Spaniard-born officials who are anxious not to subtract from the tribute sent by the Madrid Government which appoints them, notifies to some three hundred or so of those suspected Liberals, that they shall be fined to pay for the expenses of defence. Thus fines are inflicted broadcast, without control; and a wrong is sustained which commercial Americans can perfectly understand, which all Americans resent by sympathy. The feeling extends every day. There is an idea constantly gaining ground that the genuine Cubans—the residents of European extraction who are born on the island—desire to join the Union, but are prevented by foreign Royalists at a distance. Every State in the Union sympathizes with that position; the individual friends of the Cubans feel political sympathies animated by personal regard; and some thousands, whose numbers are continually increasing, are ready to act as a volunteer auxiliary corps in Cuba. These thousands again possess the sympathy of tens of thousands; and the American Executive would contravene public opinion if it appeared fighting on the side of Absolute Spain against the Cuban form of "Native Americanism." Were Spain free to copy the conduct of the English Government, the Executive of Washington would be released from an urgent anxiety, and would find no necessity to buy peace, as it proposes to buy it, in purchasing Cuba from insolvent Spain with a large sum of money.

In the American view we are stating, the interests of all parties would be served by such an arrangement. Cuba, of course, is supposed to be anxious on every ground political and social; while commercially it would share the prosperity that extends to the whole Union. France and England, who have committed themselves to some advocacy of Spanish rights, are believed to have a material interest in sanctioning the release of Cuba from a fiscal and custom-system which prevents the large trade that might otherwise be enjoyed by the merchants of Western Europe. Spain herself, so Washington thinks, would not lose if she had in hand a sum of money equivalent to a few future years of Cuban revenue, and were released from those military and naval expenses which she now incurs to retain the island, and which probably leave to her annually only a nominal profit upon the possession. Moreover, money would rescue Spain from the weight of debt with which she now vainly struggles, would supply the means for developing her internal resources, and would be the first step towards placing her on a level with other European countries.

Now it is believed in Washington, that a more perfect understanding in England of questions like these would be as conducive to cement the friendly feeling between the great States on either side of the Atlantic, as unquestionably a better comprehension of English politics developed in Canada has contributed to the esteem and confidence of Americans for England.

Absently American influence has procured consideration for some questions, concessions upon some points, which the Union had greatly at heart. The immunity for neutrals during war is a decided effusion of American influence. Although not greatly beneficial, the power of America it would be preposterous to deny. The stake which she has acquired in the wide extension of her commerce is highly manifest; and the degree in which that commerce is influenced by treaties arranged between European powers is equally evident. The advantage of knowing the wishes, and of receiving any advice which American statesmen can contribute to deliberation upon the political arrangements of the civilized world, could hardly be despised by any assemblage of European statesmen.

Commodore Perry and the Japan Squadron.

From the New-York Herald, Nov. 11.

The Commodore proceeds to the United States, via England, in the out going mail steamer, having brought his mission to these Eastern Seas to an eminently successful issue. In his own country he will doubtless be received with all the honors due to a successful diplomatist. In former issues we have extended to Commodore PERRY our faint note of applause for the humane and statesmanlike manner in which the negotiations with Japan were commenced, and on his departure we would congratulate him on their happy issue. The general conduct of the seamen of the fleet we believe to have been exemplary. One unfortunate occurrence took place at Loochoo, by which one man lost his life. Since our last issue courts martial have sat upon two prisoners. We have not learnt the particulars of the cases, but we have heard that both were cases of insubordination—the one more aggravated than the other. In the case of one man who had kicked an officer, the court sentenced him to the loss of all his arrears of pay and to dismissal from the service at the first American port at which the vessel to which he belonged should touch. The second case was of a more serious character; it was that of a man presenting a loaded musket at an officer. The Court sentenced the prisoner to death, but the Commodore, in virtue of his prerogative, transmuted this sentence into that of imprisonment for life. This clemency, we regret to learn, caused some bad feeling to arise between the officers who formed the Court-martial and the Commodore. The Susquehanna, Captain BUCHANAN, a gentleman of whom the service may well be proud, left for the States, via the Sandwich Islands and California, on the 4th of September, in which vessel Commodore RINGGOLD was a passenger. The Mississippi will leave for the States this day, taking the same route.

Business of the General Land Office.

From the Washington Correspondence of Nov. 17

The General Land Office has done a big business during the past fiscal year. About 9,500,000 acres have been surveyed, and of these, 7,000,000 have been brought into market, which yielded a revenue of nine millions two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in round numbers. This shows to what extraordinary extent speculations in lands and real estate generally, have been carried on the past season, and explains in a measure the tightness of the money market in the Western States, now that the dry goods men in the Eastern cities have nearly seen the bottom of their business.

During the past fiscal year some three and a half millions of acres were entered with military land warrants, eleven millions of acres were claimed as swamp lands by the States, and one and a half millions, (the residue of former appropriations) were selected as donations for roads by the general Government—showing upwards of twenty millions of acres were, in all, disposed of during the last fiscal year.

The increased revenue on cash sales amount alone to $6,000,000, which is a million more than I stated in yesterday's letter.

The California land commission will require a further extension, which, I have no doubt, will be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. The whole number of claims submitted, is 813. Of these 72 have been decided by the old board of 1851, and 352 by the new board appointed in 1853, leaving nearly half the number of cases to be disposed of. Of the cases decided 204, covering an area of 736 square leagues of land, have been affirmed, and 103 cases covering an area of 383 square leagues, have been rejected.

The Order Denying Mr. Soulé a Passage Through France Revoked.

From the Washington Union.

In announcing this agreeable intelligence, we only remark at present, that, so far as we could learn, it was the opinion of those who had the best means of forming a correct judgment upon the case, that the refusal of the French Government to permit Mr. SOULÉ to enter into France, which, unexplained, certainly appeared to be an act of discourtesy, and a manifestation of unfriendly sentiments towards the United States, was the result of erroneous impressions, and that, when the matter was fully examined, the order would be revoked. We are rejoiced to be able to announce that this expectation has been realized. Mr. SOULÉ has not only permission to enter into France, but has probably already availed himself of it, and is on his return to Madrid. This information was received by the last steamer, just in time to be forwarded to the United States, unaccompanied by any explanation which alluded to it.

The conduct of Mr. Mason in this delicate and unpleasant affair has been, it is understood, eminently judicious and proper. There was nothing in the state of our relations with France which *could have justified any act of unfriendliness to*wards this country, and we presume that this feature of the case, strongly marked as it was when first presented, will be removed by the explanations which probably accompanied the revocation of the decree by which our Minister to Madrid was denied entrance into the territories of France. We reserve further comments upon this affair until this explanation is known.

Masons Must not Fight.

According to the Masonic Register, the following resolution has passed the Grand Lodge of California:

Resolved, That the practice of duelling is repugnant to the principles of Freemasonry, and in all cases where the Brethren resort to this mode of settling their disputes, it becomes the duty of the Lodge or League of which they are members, or under whose jurisdiction they may be, forthwith to expel them from all the rights and privileges of Masonry, subject to the confirmation of the Grand Lodge; and, no Brother who may fall in a duel shall be buried with Masonic honors.

The following was also passed, and, we should think, would be considered wholesome:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Grand Lodge, that the use of Masonic emblems upon sign-boards is unmasonic, and in open violation of the spirit of Freemasonry.

ECONOMY IN THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.—I have already stated that in spite of the increased expenses of the increased usefulness of the Post-Office Department, such is the rigid economy with which it is being arranged that, with the increased revenue from postage, it is expected that in about four years from now, provided the same economical administration of the Department be continued, the revenue will cover the expenditure. Since the 4th of March, 1853, but one single defalcation has occurred, (in the case of the Postmaster at Troy,) but the Sub-Treasury act being promptly applied, the whole amount was recovered, and no loss, therefore, was sustained by the Department. Considering that there are about 23,000 Post-Offices in the United States, the fact is certainly highly creditable, both to the administration of the Post-Office Department and to the discrimination used in the appointment of Postmasters.—Correspondence of Balt. Sun, Nov. 17.

FALL OF A CHURCH AND TWO MEN KILLED.—Yesterday morning, while the good people of Paddy's Run, Butler County, Ohio, Congregationalist Church, were engaged in raising the rafters of a new church edifice, at the town of New-London, the timbers gave way and a large number of persons were precipitated with the wreck from the height of the wall to the ground. Two worthy men, named ROBERT JONES and NATHANIEL JONES, were instantly killed, and scved or eight others severely wounded. There was much distress and excitement among the people, and the names of the wounded and the probabilities of their recovery, were not ascertained by our informant.—Cincinnati Commercial, Nov. 17.

"THE POOR TOO RICH TO WORK."—Under this head the Manchester Mirror has a timely and sensible article showing that many of the poor in that city are too rich to do the work which is at their hands, notwithstanding their only hope of getting through the Winter is by begging and living upon the charities of the benevolent. The Mirror states that four chaldrons of coal had laid at its office door for three days, and although there were "poor" folks in abundance about, not one of them was willing to earn an honest penny by getting in the coal. Finally, Dr. MOSES HILL and D. L. STEVENS, (formerly City Marshal,) took the job and got in the coal, receiving therefor two dollars.

TRADING OFF A WIFE.—FRANKLIN BUTTERFIELD, of Great Falls, N. H., was arrested recently on a charge of having two wives. He has been to California, and says he gained the impression that his "old wife" was dead, and married again. Neither the Justice, Sheriff, or the "old wife," seemed inclined to believe the story, but BUTTERFIELD was set at liberty on his giving the "old wife" a deed for about $400 worth of real estate in Dexter, Me.

☞ A woman condemned to death in the reign of RICHARD III. lived forty days without food or drink. A young lady 18 years of age, is mentioned in the Edinburg Medical Essays, who was thrown into such violent tetanus, or rigidity of the muscles, by the death of her father, that she was unable to swallow for fifty-four days. A still more extraordinary account is related of a man who, on recovering from a fever, had such a dislike or fear of all kinds, that for eighteen years he never tasted anything but water.

☞ Mr. DE BOW, the late Superintendent of Census, states that there are in the United States, 36,183 buildings used for religious worship of all denominations, having accommodations for over 14,000,000 persons, and of a total value, including other property, of $7,446,331. There are about 30,000 clergymen. The Methodist have more than half of all the churches. There are about 5 churches to every 3,000 of the total population. The churches of Charleston accommodate a larger portion of the population than do those of Boston.

"My lord" responded the clergyman, "My mare and I are getting old, and we are never in the same field with the hounds."

EDITORIAL.—The Boston Atlas announces that CHARLES T. CONODON, Esq., late of the New-Bedford Mercury, has become associate editor of the Atlas. Mr. CONODON is recognized by the editorial fraternity as a writer of ability, of taste and wit. He is, also, a poet of no mean pretensions; and his introduction into the editorial department of the Atlas will no doubt contribute materially to the interest of that paper.

INAUGURATION.—Rev. Dr. STEARNS is to be inaugurated as President of Amherst College on the 22d inst. The exercises will consist of a valedictory address by the retiring President, Dr. HITCHCOCK, and an inaugural address by Dr. STEARNS. On the evening previous, Dr. STEARNS will be installed as pastor of the College Church.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—We learn that Mr. A. S. The gold is said to be very pure, but has as yet been found only in small quantities.

GLEANINGS FROM THE MAILS.

A Railroad Convention was held at Salisbury, North Carolina, on the 2d instant. Resolutions were adopted in favor of a general system of internal improvements, and of the State subscribing for two-thirds of the capital stock of such works as are calculated to develop its resources. It was also resolved as expedient to construct a main trunk line of Railroad from the most eligible point on Beaufort Harbor through Onslow, to Kenansville, Clinton and Fayetteville, to Salisbury, and thence West by the most practical route to the Tennessee line; and that the Legislature be urged to pass an act authorizing the North Carolina, Tennessee and Ohio Railroad Company to run from the town of Wilmington, or from some point on the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad, through the town of Charlotte to the Tennessee line. A two-third subscription on the part of the State is asked for each of these works, so soon as private stockholders subscribe the other third.

The danger of carelessly handling fire-arms was *never more forcibly exemplified than at Boston on Sat*urday last. Warren Holt, aged about 16 years, and George F. Bemis, aged 16 years, waiters in the Quincy House, found a pistol in one of the rooms, and, without stopping to examine whether it was loaded or not, proceeded carelessly to handle it. Young Holt pointed it towards his own heart and pulled the trigger, but it missed fire. He then aimed at young Bemis, again pulled the trigger, and to his astonishment and dismay a loud report followed. He discovered that he had shot his companion. The contents of the pistol had entered Bemis's left side below the ribs, and inflicted a terrible wound. He is not expected to recover.

The election at Detroit was very orderly, and all the principal beer halls and saloons were shut with great cheerfulness by their proprietors, so long as the polls were open, in accordance with the recommendation of the Mayor.

THE EARLY BIRD CATCHES THE WORM.—It would seemingly appear that all the ladies in the City have determined to purchase their rich Dress Goods at HEARD, CLAPP & Co.'s, No. 201 Grand-street. We say it would seem so, from the immense throng that visit there since the commencement of their closing sale. Their already spacious saleerooms extended thrice their present size would scarcely afford accommodations to its patrons during the afternoons. But in order to avoid the inconvenience, and prevent unavoidable disappointment, we would suggest the advantage of a morning visit, as attended with less confusion and greater facilities of supplying the wants of purchasers. The stock, the best selected and of the latest importation, reduced in prices to one half its original cost, needs no urging to buy when once seen. Is expected to the examination of all.

TO THOSE WHO WOULD KNOW THEMSELVES.—Phrenology is the most useful of all modern discoveries; for while others enhance creature comforts mainly, this science teaches life and its laws, and unfolds human nature in all its aspects. Its fundamental doctrine is, that each mental faculty is exercised by means of a portion of the brain, called its organ, the size and quality of which are proportionate to its powers. Its proof is universal nature. All animals, as compared with all others, and all human beings, as contrasted with all others and with all animals, furnish living demonstration that it is interwoven through all nature. Professor BELLMAN says: "Phrenology undertakes to accomplish for man what philosophy performs for the external world: it claims to disclose the real state of things, and to present nature unveiled, and in her true features."

MONDAY, Nov. 20—A. M.

The course of Money confidence during the past week, as reflected by the rates of interest, and the Bond and Share sales at the Stock Exchange, was not essentially varied from the previous week. There were more failures among the merchants, but not of sufficient importance to excite remark as bearing upon the general condition of affairs. One or two Commission houses connected with the Northwestern trade have suffered their acceptances to be returned for settlement where they originated, alleging that they were mere accommodations based on Railroad and other promises, which have not been realized in season. The fact that these houses expect to continue their regular business, with credit, after *such occurrences, argues a loose condition of mer*cantile promptness. In the same spirit complaint has been made of the daily press, that the circumstance of paper going to protest should be publicly noticed to the prejudice of the payers and acceptors.

The bank embarrassments at the West have continued to be noticed through the telegraph, and the more substantial evidence of their existence has been seen in the daily forced sales of Ohio, Virginia, Missouri and other State Stocks which the Banks in trouble or threatened with it have returned on this market for realization. At the close of the week, however, the accounts come a little more favorable, and as the opinion appears to be general that the great body of the people in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois are well to do, and the embarrassments in business confined to one or two classes, there is yet hope that confidence will be at least partially restored without wide spread disaster. There continues to be a strong demand from that quarter for Specie on this City, which is supplied as rapidly as the bills receivable and securities sent forward are collected or sold. Owing to the break up among the Cincinnati Bankers and the suspension of the free Banks of Indiana and of some of the Ohio Banks, Gold rose in that city to the extravagant premium of 8 ⅌ cent in exchange for the ordinary paper currency; but subsequently declined to 2 ⅌ cent., according to the latest telegraphic dispatch on Saturday afternoon. In our own Market, discounts are had at Bank with some less difficulty than week before last, where the applicants have gone thus far through the pressure with unsuspected credit. Outside of Bank, they rule at 12 ⅌ cent., with increased caution manifested by lenders in the selection of names. Some leading Railroad acceptances have been offered at 18@24 ⅌ cent., which class of paper goes harder, just now, on account of the doubt resting on the ability of the Companies to fund their floating obligations. Their claims to credit on the score of current earnings—which, despite the hard times, were never so large, nor so well divided between passenger and freight traffic—appear to be altogether overlooked.

The Stock Market closed on Saturday with steadiness, but not strong. The fluctuations of the week left the principal Railroads and one or two of the State Stocks as follows, compared with the previous Saturday:

	Saturday, November 18.	Lowest Intermediate.	Saturday, November 11.
Erie Shares	35¼	33¼	36¼
Reading	68¼	67¼	68¾
New-York Central	93¼	91	92¼
Illinois Cen. Bonds	85¼	84¼	84¼
Virginia 6 Cent	90¼	90¼	91
Ohio Sixes, 1860	98 bid.	100	103

The Import of Foreign Merchandise for the week, including the Dry Goods table in our last paper, amounted to $1,949,797, against $2,680,100 the corresponding week of last year. For the calendar year to the present date the aggregate, according to our semi official weekly tables, is $164,891,000, against $178,156,000 same period in 1853. The export of Specie for the week, principally by the Cunard steamer on Wednesday, was $1,328,641, against $525,051 the corresponding week last year. The aggregate in 1854 to the present time $36,633,000 against $22,268,000 to the same date last year. The Sub-Treasury balance at the close of the week was $6,572,309, against $6,639,200 at the close of the week before. The receipts of Specie from California, exclusive of remittances on the Sub-Treasury, amounted to $568,000.

In the neighboring markets of Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore, the demand has ruled for money when more urgent at the close of the week. Boston had been offering discounts below New-York for a short time, but as the difference attracted attention, the extra demand soon equalized the rates. The Philadelphia Ledger of Saturday quotes 18 ⅌ cent. as the minimum rate for first class names. In Baltimore the pressure among business men is severely felt.

The disreputable hero of the San Francisco frauds, HENRY MELOON, has been confounded in some quarters with the much esteemed MELOON family in this City, two members of which occupy the highest places of trust in the Metropolitan and American Exchange Banks. There is not the most distant relationship between the names.

The weekly California packet sails to-day via Panama and Aspinwall. Another steamer from California will be due at the close of this week, with the mails and treasure from San Francisco to the 1st day of November. If the trip, like the last, should be a very short one, the steamer may be in by Wednesday.

The Anthracite Coal Trade of Schuylkill and Lehigh for the week and season is as follows:

	Week.	Season.	To date last yr.
Reading Railroad	44,861	1,990,519	1,509,734
Schuylkill Canal	27,560	844,033	801,864
Lehigh Canal	22,000	1,126,700	959,843
Total Tonnage		3,881,261	3,264,471

The Reading Road Company close their financial season on the 30th inst. They will have transported within a few thousand of two millions tons Coal, at a higher average of freights than they have realized for six years past. The Lackawanna region, not included in the above returns, will scarcely come up to the tonnage of last year, but the entire increase in the Anthracite production will not be short of 565,000 tons, allowing nothing for the Susquehanna trade.

The business on the New-York State Canals to the present date has yielded a gross revenue, from tolls, of $2,518,333, against $2,933,674 to same date last season—navigation opening in the Spring ten days later.

The Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, inviting a London and Provincial subscription of forty-seven and a half millions dollars, or £9,500,000 sterling, threatens to be a magnificent failure, so far as immediate return upon the investment of capital is concerned. The principal manager in Canada, Mr. HINCKS, recently announced to the Provincial Parliament that three important sections of the work must remain unfinished five years; and further, that if the whole Provincial aid were not made immediately available, the works must stop and the contract break down. A great sensation was produced by this startling declaration, and the House adjourned to consider the course which it would be advisable to pursue.

The Galena and Chicago Road earned in October, $183,043, of which $101,419 was from Passengers. This exceeds the great business of September by $33,043.

We have been requested to call attention to the advertisement of the Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company, and to say that the office is independent of the Bank of the same name which failed a few weeks since, though located in the same quarter of the city.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CHURCHWELL, Member of Congress, has been made President of the Bank of East Tennessee, in place of Mr. J. W. J. NILES, who voluntarily retires, after having placed the Bank in a good condition of credit, and given it a standing among the banks in Tennessee which, from the errors of a more speculative management, it did not enjoy when he took charge two or three years ago.

Savings Institutions.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Not being thoroughly versed in monetary matters, I have taken the liberty of addressing you, and to ask which of the Savings Banks in this City may be considered perfectly safe, or, in the event of a suspension, would be able to pay depositors 90 ⅌ cent. Do you consider the Greenwich and Bowery Savings' Banks safe? I, with many others, would take it very kind were you to give the information desired, either by note addressed to me, Union-square Post-office, or through the columns of the TIMES. W. S. D.

We know nothing to the prejudice of either of the offices named by our correspondent. The Bowery Institution, we understand from one of the managers, has about five millions dollars securely invested in Bond and Mortgage, and in the Stocks of the States and United States, within the strict rule of the laws of New-York on the subject. In regard to the other branch of the inquiry, our correspondent will probably remember that we have heretofore mentioned the Seamen's Bank of Savings, of which Mr. PELATIAH PERIT is President; the Merchants' Clerks', under charge of Mr. JOHN J. PALMER, and the old Bank of Savings in Chambers-street. It would afford us pleasure to publish the exact present condition of every Savings Office in town, if furnished by the managers.

Citizens' Bank of Memphis.

From the Memphis Enquirer.

In consequence of a publication made in one of the Nashville papers, stating that the Citizens' Bank of Memphis and Nashville had failed, a very unnecessary excitement has been gotten up. The publication above referred to was made through a mistake which doubtless originated in the failure of the Citizens' Bank at Cincinnati. The Nashville paper corrected immediately the error. This is not the first attempt that has been made to prejudice the public against this Bank. From some quarters very unjust and unwarrantable attacks have been made upon it, which have always, upon investigation, proven to be utterly false and unfounded. The Citizens' Bank is founded upon a firm basis, and is conducted by gentlemen whose standing and business capacity are unquestioned, and which is a safeguard against even a suspicion. The Bank is sound and safe, and will remain so as long as its present stockholders, directors and officers have anything to do with it. There is not a safer Bank in the State. They are ready at any time to redeem all the bills they have out, and the public need entertain no fears whatever as to its ability to meet any and every demand.
